

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

NARVA TENURE.

Its history and incidents—Grant of narva village in inam—Alienations by narvadars—Baharkhali—Gammajman—Patimejman—Revenue survey in a narva village—Suit by inamdar to recover rent as settled by the survey—Landlord and tenant.—The narva tenure and its incidents discussed and explained. The inamdar of the narva village of Daker desired that the revenue survey should be introduced into it. The usual measurements and assessments were made, and the Superintendent of the Revenue Survey, following the analogy of the system prevalent in Government villages, held a conference with the narvadars and drew up a scheme, to which the narvadars assented, for the future management of the village and for settling the future relations between the narvadars and the inamdars as representing the fiscal interests of the Government. The narvadars agreed to retain their narva tenure along with an assessment made upon the principles of the revenue survey; and they resigned their right over baharkhali lands aliened from the several narva shares, on the understanding that the inamdar was to levy from the tenants one-fourth of the difference between the quit-rent actually paid and the full assessment as ascertained by the survey. The narvadars and their tenants, the actual holders of the baharkhali lands, having refused to pay this one-fourth, the inamdar sued them to recover it or the full assessment as ascertained by the survey. Held that the inamdar was entitled to recover the one-fourth according to the scheme, which was binding on the whole body of narvadars, even though the defendant and others, being a minority, had not assented to the action of the majority. The inamdar's fiscal rights include the right to levy the ordinary assessment, except where a contract stands in the way, and he can raise the assessment to a limit which is fair and equitable according to the custom of the country. As between the narvadars and the Government, there is nothing to prevent the former from consenting to the exclusion of any part of the village lands from the contract. The severance of such part makes it immediately subject to full taxation on ordinary principles, and any agreement with an incumbrancer in limitation of the narvadar's right to take rent can operate only as a ground of action against the narvadars themselves. MAHOMED GANESH TAMBKAR v. ACT (XVII OF 1873).See SUPERINTENDENCE OF HIGH COURT—

CHARTER ACT, s. 15—CIVIL CASES.

[24 W. R., 311]

1. ——— Right of appeal.—Act XVII of 1873 was not intended to deprive the Nawab Nazim of Moorshedabad of any right of appeal to the High Court which he had before it was passed. NAWAB NAZIM OF BENGAL v. AMRAO BEGUM 21 W. R., 59

2. ——— Submission of decree of Court as a claim to Commissioners.—Power of High Court.—Certain judgment-creditors were held to have committed an error of judgment in submitting their decree to Commissioners appointed under Act XVII of 1873, as if it were a new and unascertained claim. Where this was done, and the Commissioners expressed their opinion upon the matter involved (although it had already been determined), the High Court held that it had no authority to enquire into their award. OMRAO BEGUM v. COMMISSIONERS APPOINTED UNDER ACT XVII OF 1873 24 W. R., 394

s. 11.—Agreement for appropriation of payments—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 60—Suit for rent.—So far as the Nawab Nazim's Debts Act is concerned, rent due by the Nawab is on the same footing as any other debt incurred by him, and before his property can be made liable to satisfy such rent debt, the consent of the Governor General in Council must first be obtained to the issue of execution. BOOKMINY BULLUB ROY v. MULK JAMANIA BEGUM. I. L. R., 9 Calc., 914; 12 C. L. R., 534

1. ——— s. 12.—Jurisdiction of Commissioners—Parties.—The Commissioners appointed under the Nawab Nazim's Debts Act (XVII of 1873) (an Act to provide for the liquidation of the debts of the Nawab Nazim, and for his protection from legal process), having ascertained and certified that a certain zamindari was nizamut property (i.e., held by the Government for the purpose of upholding the dignity of the Nawab Nazim for the time being), the fact that this property had, before the passing of the Act, been conveyed by the Nawab Nazim to his son, did not deprive the Commissioners of jurisdiction to deal with the question. The plain language of s. 12 of the Act is not controlled by any words in the preamble. A suit brought by a claimant against the Government and the grantee to recover the property, without the Nawab Nazim having been joined as a party, could not proceed. *OMRAO BEGUM v. 2. ——— Award of Commissioners conclusive—Construction of documents not establishing a charge on immovable property.—Commissioners appointed under Act XVII of 1873, by their award, found that an estate was in the possession of the Government for the purpose of upholding the dignity of the Nawab Nazim for the time being, a finding within their competence to make, of which the effect was that the Government held the property freed and discharged from

2. — Liability of Nazir—Avoidance of responsibility.—A Nazir is the head of an important department, and must be solely responsible for the truth of what he reports or admits. He cannot be permitted to avoid responsibility by urging that his mohurrir deceived him. QUEEN v. TORUZZAL ALI [7 W. R., Cr., 109]

3. — Attachment of property in execution of decree—Failure to return property attached in satisfaction of decree—Beng. Act V of 1868, ss. 4 and 8.—In a suit brought against the plaintiff in the Collector's Court for arrears of rent, a decree was obtained, and a warrant was issued for the attachment of certain moveable property belonging to the plaintiff. The warrant was addressed to the Nazir of the Collector's Court, and was by him delivered to one of the registered peons of the Court for execution. The peon reported to the Nazir that he had attached the property in question, and had placed it in charge of certain persons, whose receipt for it he produced and fled. Subsequently, the plaintiff paid the amount of the decree into Court and an order was made releasing his property from the attachment. A peon was sent to restore the property to the plaintiff, but the persons in whose charge it was said to have been left alleged that they had never taken possession of the property, and the peon was unable to restore the property to the plaintiff. In a suit brought by the plaintiff against the Nazir to recover the property or its value, — Held that the Nazir was not liable, Bengal Act V of 1868 having altered the relation which formerly existed between the Nazir and the peons of the Revenue Courts, and put them in the position of paid servants of Government. KALIE COOMAR CHATTERJI v. SIDDHESUR MUNDUL

4. — Warrant of arrest of judgment-debtor—Escape of debtor—Negligence.—The plaintiff sued out a warrant for the arrest of his judgment-debtor on the 4th December 1876. The warrant was lodged with the Nazir on the 16th December, and was to be in force till the 4th January 1877. On the 22nd December 1876 the Nazir was informed that the judgment-debtor was already in the civil jail under a writ of execution issued by another creditor. The Nazir then returned the warrant to the Subordinate Judge who had issued it. On the 29th December the Subordinate Judge again sent it to the Nazir's office, where it was duly received by the Nazir's karkun (defendant No. 2). This fact was not reported by the karkun to the Nazir (defendant No. 1) until the 4th January 1877. On the 1st January 1877 the judgment-debtor's debt was paid by Government, and he was released in honour of Her Majesty's assumption of the title of Empress of India. The judgment-debtor thereupon left the district, and could not be found, and the plaintiff's warrant remained unexecuted. The plaintiff sued the Nazir and his karkun for allowing his judgment-debtor to escape. Held that the Nazir ought not to have sent the warrant back to the Subordinate Judge, and that there was no necessity for a fresh order on it until the time which it had to run had expired. Held further that, if the Nazir forgot the existence of this unexecuted warrant

on the 1st January 1877, and thus allowed the debtor to be released from the former process, when he ought to have been re-arrested under the plaintiff's warrant, there was actual negligence on his part, making him liable in damages to the plaintiff. Quere—Whether or not the Nazir could have been made responsible for the negligence of the karkun, who was not his servant, but the servant of, and paid by, the Government and appointed by the District Judge, if the warrant had been lodged with the karkun in the first instance, and that fact had never been communicated to the Nazir, and if he had never known of the existence of the warrant. KASTURCHAND v. RAJJI SADASHIV

[1 L. R., 4 Bom., 65]

5. — Misrepresentation of solvency of surety by witness to surety-bond.—The plaintiff held a money-decree against M, who was arrested in execution of it. On being brought to the Court, however, M applied for his discharge as an insolvent under s. 273 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1869). He was released on the security of G, who executed a bond for the appearance of M at the inquiry into his insolvency. The defendant attested the bond, and wrote in the attestation that G was a solvent person. In consequence of the non-appearance of M, the plaintiff sought to execute his decree against the surety G, who, on his arrest, also applied for his discharge on the ground of his insolvency, and was discharged after inquiry. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendant for the amount of his decree and cost of execution, on the ground of his representation in the attestation that G was solvent. Quere—Whether the Nazir was liable to the plaintiff for negligence in not taking a proper surety. NAGO MAHADEV v. NARAYAN RAMCHANDRA . 1 L. R., 4 Bom., 465

1. ——— Requisites for action for negligence—Act contrary to law.—To sustain an action for negligence, there must be an obligation on the part of the defendant to use care, and a breach of that obligation to the plaintiff's injury is an act contrary to law. SVAMI NAYUDU v. SUBRAMANIA MUDALI . . . 2 Mad., 153

2. ——— Sending goods by railway company—Carrier—Duty of persons sending goods of a dangerous nature—Notice—Act XVIII of 1854, s. 15—Action for compensation for destruction of life.—Held (PEARSON, J., dissenting) that a person who sends an article of a dangerous and explosive nature to a railway company to be carried by such company, without notifying to the servants of the company the dangerous nature of the article, is liable for the consequences of an explosion, whether it occurs in a manner which he could not have foreseen as probable or not. Held also (PEARSON, J., dissenting) that such a person is liable for the consequences of an explosion occurring in a manner which he could not have foreseen, if he omits to take reasonable precautions to preclude the risk of explosion. LYELL v. GANGA DAI . I L. R., 1 All., 60

3. ——— Railway Company—Injury to persons travelling.—The plaintiff was a passenger travelling on the defendants' railway, and received severe injuries from a fall which he experienced in stepping upon the platform when the train stopped. Held that the Railway Company was guilty of negligence in not keeping the station properly lighted, in allowing the train to overshoot the station, and in not warning the plaintiff against alighting; also that the injuries sustained by the plaintiff were caused by the negligence in question, and that the plaintiff did not by his own want of care contribute to the accident. WOODHOUSE v. CALCUTTA AND SOUTH EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY 9 W. R., 73

4. ——— Hire of boats—Damage—Liability of bailee.—A contracted with B for the hire of certain cargo boats. While being towed by a steamer which A had chartered according to agreement, the boats sustained great damage by reason of gross negligence on the part of C, whom A had placed in charge. Held that A must be held responsible to B for the negligence of C. GREESH CHUNDER BANNERJEE v. COLLINS . . . 2 Hyde, 79

5. ——— Damages for personal injuries—Unfenced hole—Licensee—Contractor.—The plaintiff claimed to recover Rs63,500 from the defendants as damages for injuries sustained by him by reason of his having fallen into a hole which had been dug upon certain land of the defendants on the 1st September 1885. The land in question was the property of the first defendants (the Port Trustees), and was in their possession at the date of the accident to the plaintiff; but an agreement had been made, whereby it was to be leased by them to the second defendant, who was accordingly let into possession in January 1883. For some years, the first defendants had been in the habit of letting out the greater part of the land for tenting purposes in lots marked out with pegs, but the tents were taken down each monsoon. For two or three years previously to the accident, people had been accustomed to cross the land without any hindrance or prohibition. The plaintiff himself had used the path across the land, as a short cut, for a period of eighteen months. This path led across the tenting ground to a gate which was generally open, and which opened upon the high road. No express permission had ever been given to any of the persons who were in the habit of using this path. It was a mere beaten track, and, so far from being a public way, it was from time to time obstructed, in the tenting season, by the ropes and pegs of the tents. The plaintiff had for some time been in occupation of a bungalow belonging to the first defendants, which was situated in that part of the land which was furthest away from the high road. There was a regularly constructed roadway from the bungalow to the high road, which the plaintiff might have used, but, as a short cut, he and others were in the habit of using the beaten track. For this he had merely a tacit permission. On the morning of the 1st September 1885, he left his bungalow and went to his business, as usual, by the short cut across the land. When returning by the same way at about 11 o'clock at night he fell into the hole which had been dug in the afternoon of that day, and sustained the injuries complained of. The hole was several feet deep, and was dug right across the pathway. The plaintiff had no notice of the hole being dug, or of any intention to dig it. The night was very dark, and there was no negligence on the part of the plaintiff, nor any want of ordinary care and caution. There was no watchman and no fence, nor was there any light which might enable persons using the path to avoid the danger. The second defendant, as above stated, had agreed to take the said land from the first defendants on lease for building purposes. On the day of the accident, some months before the execution of the lease, the second defendant through his engineer and contractor H applied to the first defendants for permission to make "borings" in the land, which permission was given. H thereupon caused the hole in question to be dug. In their written statement the first defendants contended that in using the short cut across their land, the plaintiff was a trespasser, and that he had used it without their knowledge or consent; that the hole was dug without their knowledge, and that the "borings," for which they had given permission, were merely small holes of a diameter of six inches, or thereabouts, which could not have been a source of danger. The second defendant pleaded that at the time of the accident he was not in possession of the land, but had merely entered into an agreement for a lease of it; that he had employed a competent engineer and contractor, H, to make borings, in order to ascertain of what the sub-soil consisted, and that H contracted to do the work and obtain leave from the first defendants to enter on the land; that the said H subsequently entered on the land, and according to his own discretion and without any control or interference from him (the second defendant), took such steps as he thought necessary to ascertain the nature of the said sub-soil; and he (the second defendant) contended that, if there had been negligence in the performance of the work, he was not liable. Held (1) that there was negligence in digging the hole across a path used by several licensees, and in not placing any person or light to warn passengers of the danger arising from the hole and the excavated earth which was heaped up near it. Held (2) that the first defendants were not liable to the plaintiff. The permission which they had given to H was a permission to make "borings" only; and the hole, which was actually dug by H, was dug without their knowledge or permission. H was not shown to be in any sense their servant or agent. The plaintiff was a bare licensee, and the first defendants were under no obligation to him to keep the path in a safe state or in good order. Held (3) that the second defendant was liable to the plaintiff. H was not a contractor, in the legal sense, so as to exempt the second defendant from responsibility, but was the servant of the second defendant pro hoc vice, and that the digging of the hole was within the course of his employment, or within the scope of his authority. The Court of first instance awarded, as damages, a sum of Rs33,000, which, on appeal, was reduced to Rs17,000. EVANS v. TRUSTEES OF THE PORT OF BOMBAY

6. — Suit for damages by parents of a child killed by negligence—Act XIII of 1855—Death by negligence—Contributory negligence—Liability for negligence of servants—Damages, Assessment of—Deduction for maintenance of child—Funeral expenses.—The plaintiff's unmarried daughter, a child of between five and six years old, fell into an open manhole of a sewer in a lane in Bombay on the 20th August 1880, between 4½ and 5 o'clock P.M., and, when her body was recovered, life was extinct. The sewer was vested in the Municipality of Bombay, and was under the control of the Municipal Commissioner by virtue of ss. 220 and 289 of the Bombay Municipal Act of 1888. When such manholes are opened, it is the duty of the Municipal Commissioner under s. 321 of that Act to have them properly fenced and guarded. On the 28th August 1890 the manhole in question was opened for the purpose of inserting a flushing-door in the sewer. From the time the manhole was opened until the occurrence of the accident the deceased child's mother was seated at the corner of the street selling cucumbers about four yards from the manhole in question. The hole was at first properly fenced with four timber hurdles about 4 feet high set upright round it at a distance of 2 feet from the hole, secured at the corners with ropes. Soon after 4-30 P.M., the superintendent in charge of the work gave orders to cease work and close the manhole for the night. The accident took place almost immediately afterwards. The Judge found on the evidence that the child fell into the open hole in the interval that elapsed between the taking down of the fence and putting the cover on the hole. What she was doing the instant before she fell, there was nothing to show. She was seen running and playing about the street during the afternoon. Her mother, who was sitting close by, did not see the accident, her attention being at the moment occupied by some customers. She admitted that before the accident occurred she knew the fence was down and the hole open, and she would not have left the child go to it had she been playing beside her. Held (1) that the defendants were guilty of negligence, and that they were liable for negligence of their servants, although the latter acted contrary to the express orders given by their superior; (2) that although the mother of the child might have been guilty of negligence which contributed to the accident, yet if the defendants could, by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, have avoided the mischief which happened, her negligence would not excuse them; (3) that, as regards damages, in cases of this nature, distinct evidence of the loss sustained or benefit expected is not necessary. The jury may look at all the circumstances of the case, and especially at the position of the parents and age of the child, and call in aid their own experience in arriving at their conclusions. Where damages are allowed, a reasonable sum should be deducted on account of the maintenance for such period as the child might reasonably have been expected to live with her parents. In an action under Act XIII of 1856, no sum can be awarded in respect of funeral expenses, whether for removal or disposal of the body or for outlay—for ceremonial or obsequial purposes. NARAYEN JETHA v. MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONERS OF BOMBAY. I. L. R., 16 Bom., 254

7. — Liability of principal for acts of contractor—Right of support of house by adjoining soil—Principal and agent or contractor.—The plaintiffs were owners of a house consisting of a ground-floor and upper storey and measuring 77 feet in length. On the south side of the house was a gully, 3 feet 6 inches wide, separating it from another upper-storied house. The plaintiffs in this suit complained that in January 1891 the defendant by his servants dug a trench, 8 feet deep, along the whole length of the gully for the purpose of laying a drain pipe, and that the work was done so negligently that the plaintiffs' house was injured and became in such a dangerous condition that it had to be pulled down. The plaintiffs claimed Rs.996 as damages. The defendant denied the negligence, and alleged that the work was not done by his servants or agents, but by a contractor. Held that the defendant was liable for the act of his contractor. The work was necessarily attended with risk, and the defendant could not free himself from liability by employing a contractor. The defendant, as well as the contractor, was liable to the plaintiffs. DRONDIBA KRISHNAJI v. MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONERS OF BOMBAY

8. — Loss by fire—Sale set aside—Decree in favour of vendor—Possession—Purchaser in possession after decree and pending appeal—Accident—Liability for damage—Maxim, Volenti non fit injuria.—The plaintiff and the second defendant A were brothers, and worked a cotton press in partnership. In August 1884 A sold the press for Rs.5,000 to V (the first defendant), who paid A Rs.5,000 earnest-money, and was put into possession. The plaintiff then brought a suit (No. 327 of 1884)

against A praying for a dissolution of the partnership. V was also a party defendant to that suit. The plaintiff alleged that Rs.5,000 was much too low a price for the press, and he objected to the sale. He prayed that V might be restrained from continuing in possession of the press and working it, and that a receiver might be appointed to take possession of it until further order. On the 21st April 1885, on a motion, the Court refused to grant an injunction and receiver, but ordered V to pay Rs.30,000 (i.e., the balance of the purchase-money), to the solicitors of the parties, for investment until the hearing of the suit, and directed that, if that sum was not paid by the 21st May 1885, a receiver should be appointed to take possession of the press. The suit (i.e., No. 327 of 1884) was heard on the 15th February 1887, when it was held by the Court that the sale by A to V was without authority; that the defendant V took nothing under it, and that the plaintiff was entitled to have it set aside. Certain matters still remained to be decided; but on the 28th February 1887 the decree in the suit was made giving effect to the findings already arrived at on the 15th February. The decree by consent directed various accounts to be taken, and among others, an account of the profits realized by the working of the press by the defendant V since his possession thereof, credit being given to him for all sums expended by him in the repairs, maintenance, and working of the said press and for the management thereof by him. The decree further ordered that the defendant V should be repaid the Rs.30,000 which he had paid under the order of the 21st April 1885, and directed "that on such payment the said defendant V do forthwith give over possession of the press to the plaintiff and the defendant A." The defendant V at once gave notice of his intention to appeal. There was some delay in drawing up the decree. The minutes were spoken to on the 31st March 1887; the decree was sealed on the 13th April 1887. Meantime on the 6th April 1887, and while the defendant V was still in possession, a fire broke out in the press, and much damage was done. Subsequently to the sealing of the decree as above stated, the press in its damaged condition was handed over to the plaintiff's firm by V, who also desisted from prosecuting his appeal, the injury to the press having made it contrary to his interest to appeal. In May 1887 the plaintiff filed the present suit, claiming to recover Rs.50,000 from the defendant V as the value of the press, or such further sum as might be necessary to rebuild and restore it. He alleged that the fire was caused by the working of the press, and contended that the working of the press by the defendant V after the decree of the 28th February was an act of trespass by him, and that therefore, independently of the question whether the fire was caused by the negligence of V and his servants, the said V was liable for the loss occasioned by the fire. Held that, independently of negligence, the defendant V was not liable to the plaintiff for the loss occasioned by the fire. Down to the decree of the 28th February 1887, the defendant in keeping possession of the press and working it was, no doubt, a trespasser, but subsequently to that decree he remained in possession and worked the press with the consent of the plaintiff. The maxim volenti non fit injuria, applied to the circumstances of the case. Held also that, no negligence having been proved against the defendant, the suit must be dismissed. JAMSETJI BUDJORJI BAHADURJI v. KEBRAHIM VEDINA . . . I. L. R., 13 Bom., 183

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS, SUMMARY PROCEDURE ON—

Act V of 1866, the Act mentioned in the following cases, was repealed and its provisions re-enacted in the Civil Procedure Code. See CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE, 1862, ss. 532, 538.

1. ————— Return of summons—Procedure.—In a suit under Act V of 1866, the summons should be returned in the usual way; and after the expiration of the required time, an order of the Court or a decree should be obtained. SCHILLER v. MARKER . . . 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 283

2. ————— Time to obtain leave to defend—Act V of 1866, s. 3.—Although Act V of

1866, s. 3, only gives the defendant seven days to get leave to come in and defend on action on a bill, note, etc., the Court must be satisfied before granting a decree that the defendant has had a full opportunity to obtain leave to defend. GROB v. PALMER

[1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 395

3. ————— Extension of time for appearance—Jurisdiction.—Where, in a suit under Act V of 1866, the defendant is at such a distance as would make it impossible for him to put in an appearance within the seven days allowed by the Act, the Court will stay execution for a time long enough to allow him to appear. Suits cannot be brought under this Act against persons resident out of the jurisdiction. CHANDRAKANT ROY v. POGOSZ

[3 B. L. R., O. C., 83

4. ————— Leave to appear and defend—Practice—Costs.—The Court will give leave to a defendant to appear and defend in suits under Act V of 1866, where he shows a defence apparently real; but where there is a doubt as to the bond fides of the defence, payment of money into Court will be ordered or security directed to be given. The Court has, in giving leave to defend, a discretion to order security for costs, not only where it doubts the bond fides of the defence, but also if it considers the matter of defence raised is unnecessary, though allowable. If the plaintiff has not been heard at first against the defendant's application, the Court will always allow him to come in afterwards and show that the leave ought not to have been granted, or, if granted at all, in more stringent terms. VONLINTZGY v. NARAYAN SING . . . 6 B. L. R., Ap., 64

5. ————— Leave to defend.—In an action on a promissory note under this Act the defendant was allowed to come in and defend after the plaintiff had obtained a decree; the decree was set aside and written statements ordered. JOSEPH v. SOLANO

6. ————— Notarial protest—Evidence of dishonour—Hundi—Bill of exchange.—A notarial protest of any bill of exchange noted at any time after the passing of Act V of 1866 is prima facie evidence that the bill has been dishonoured under s. 18 of that Act, although the sections relating to summary procedure on bills of exchange did not come into operation till May 1st, 1866. A hundi, which contains a direction on sufficient consideration to the drawee, and accepted by him, is within the terms of the Act, and such a document is assignable without any regular form of endorsement, if sufficient cause appears in the handwriting of an endorser to indicate an intention to assign it. EAST INDIA BANK v. KHOJAR VULLIE GOOLWARY

[1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 247

7. ————— Decree—Right of plaintiff suing under the Act.—Under the summary procedure on Bills of Exchange Act (V of 1866), the plaintiff is entitled to claim by his summons and obtain by his decree whatever sum, principal and interest, is, on the legal construction of the instrument, demandable. DESOUZA v. Admission of the plaint was refused, unless evidence was given that the note had been paid, and to explain why the endorsement was struck out. As under Act V of 1866 evidence could not be received, the plaint was not admitted. CHARTERED MERCANTILE BANK v. SECONDE

ss. 43, 83, and 241—Vendor and purchaser—Agreement—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Cause of action—Assessment of revenue.—
The purchaser of a certain estate paying revenue to Government agreed with the vendors, shortly after the sale, that they should retain a certain portion of such estate free of rent, and that he would pay the revenue payable in respect of such portion. In 1853, in a suit by the vendors against the purchaser to enforce this agreement, the Sudder Court held that the revenue payable in respect of such portion of the estate was payable by the purchaser. In 1875, on a fresh settlement of the estate, the representatives in title of the purchaser applied to the settlement officer to settle such portion of the estate with the representative in title of the vendors. The settlement officer refused this application, but it was subsequently allowed by the superior revenue authorities. The representative in title of the vendors then sued the representatives in title of the purchaser in the Civil Court, claiming "that he might, in accordance with the agreement between the vendors and the purchaser, be exempted from paying revenue in respect of such portion, as against the defendants, without any injury to the Government: that the defendants might be ordered to pay as heretofore such revenue: and that the defendants might be ordered never to claim or demand from him any revenue they might be compelled to pay in respect of such portion." Held per SPANKIE, J., that, assuming that the agreement between the vendors and the purchaser was enforceable, the act of the defendants in moving the settlement officer to settle such portion of the estate with the plaintiff gave the plaintiff a cause of action. Also that the object of the plaintiff's suit being to obtain a declaration that, as between him and the defendants, the latter were bound to pay revenue in respect of such portion, the suit was not barred by cl. (b), s. 241 of Act XIX of 1873. Also that, although the revenue authorities might regard the decision of the Sudder Court as binding on the parties then before the Court, for the currency of the then settlement, that decision, that settlement having expired, and s. 83 of Act XIX of 1873 having come into force, could not control the power of the revenue authorities to settle the land in question with the plaintiff who was its proprietor. Held per OLD-FIELD, J., that, with reference to ss. 43 and 83 of Act XIX of 1873, the Civil Courts could not relieve the plaintiff of his liability to pay revenue. Held by the Court that, in the absence of proof that the agreement by the purchaser was intended to extend beyond the period of the settlement then current, and that it was binding upon his representatives in title, the plaintiff could not obtain the declaration which he sought. *HIRA LAL v. 1. ——— Ex-proprietary tenant—Possession of sir land, Right to.—Since Act XVIII of 1873 came into force, a co-sharer entitled to obtain by pre-emption the proprietary right of another co-sharer is not entitled ordinarily to a decree against the vendor for possession of the sir, but only for the possession of the proprietary right in the sir. He is, however, entitled to possession of the sir land as against the vendee. BALDEO PANDEY v. JHARI KUAR . . . 7 N. W., 334

2. ——— Usufructuary mortgage—Ex-proprietary tenant—Sir land.—Held by the Full Bench (OLDFIELD and BRODHRUST, JJ., dissenting) that a person who creates a usufructuary mortgage of zamindari property becomes an ex-proprietor or occupancy-tenant of the sir land under s. 7 of the N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881). Per PETHERAM, C.J.—A usufructuary mortgage is, for the time being, the proprietor of the property, inasmuch as a proprietor is the person entitled to exclusive possession at the time; and the intention of the Legislature, as expressed in s. 7 of the Rent Act, is that, when a zamindar ceases to be entitled to occupy the sir land as proprietor, he shall have the right to occupy it as an ex-proprietor tenant under s. 5. Bhagwan Singh v. Murlu Singh, I. L. R., 1 All., 549, dissented from. Per STRAIGHT, J.—The words "lose" and "part with" in s. 7 of the Rent Act were intended to cover all cases in which a proprietor of land has either voluntarily or by operation of law deprived himself permanently or temporarily of the power to exercise full proprietary right over his property. Per MAHMOOD, J.—The meaning of the words "proprietary rights" in s. 7 of the Rent Act is equivalent to that of the term "full ownership," corresponding to dominium in the Roman law and fee-simple estate in English law. The right of a usufructuary mortgagee cannot be called proprietorship; and having regard to s. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, the execution of a usufructuary mortgage does not amount to a transfer of the proprietary right. The word "lose" as used in s. 7 of the Rent Act means the transfer of proprietary rights otherwise than by the will of the owner in consequence of some incident of law. The term "part with" is a general expression including both absolute and temporary alienation; and a usufructuary mortgage is a "parting with" some of the incidents of ownership, and falls within the purview of s. 7, inasmuch as the rights of possession and of the enjoyment of the usufruct are transferred from the mortgagor to the mortgagee, though such a transfer does not amount to a total alienation of proprietorship. Bhagwan Singh v. Murli Singh, I. L. R., 1 All., 549, dissented from. Gopal Pandey v. Parsotam Das, I. L. R., 5 All., 121; Ganga Din v. Dhurandhar Singh, I. L. R., 5 All., 496; and Gulab Rai v. Indar Singh, I. L. R., 6 All., 54, referred to. Per OLDFIELD, J.—The words "lose or part with his proprietary rights in any mehal" in s. 7 of the Rent Act mean a loss or parting which divests absolutely of all proprietary rights, leaving no interest of a proprietary kind in the mehal; this does not happen in a usufructuary mortgage, and therefore the latter is not a loss of, or parting with, proprietary rights, within the meaning of s. 7. Bhagwan Singh v. Murli Singh, I. L. R., 1 All., 549, approved. Per BRODHURST, J.—The word "lose" in s. 7 of the Rent Act means involuntarily lose, as, for instance, by auction-sale, and "part with" means voluntarily and entirely divested of by means, e.g., of gift or private sale. "Proprietary rights" means the whole of the proprietary rights; and a usufructuary mortgagor of zamindari property cannot be said to have lost or parted with his proprietary right therein, and therefore does not, under the provisions of s. 7 of the Rent Act, become an ex-proprietary or occupancy tenant of the sir land. INDAR SEN v. NAUBAT SINGH. I. L. R., 7 All., 553

3. ———— Usufructuary mortgage of zamindari including sir—Losing or parting with proprietary right in mehal—Ex-proprietary tenant.—A zamindar who makes a usufructuary mortgage of his zamindari including his sir land does not so "lose or part with his proprietary rights" within the meaning of s. 7 of Act XII of 1881 as to become an ex-proprietary tenant of his sir land. Bhagwan Singh v. Murli Singh, I. L. R., 1 All., 459, and Indar Sen v. Naubat Singh, I. L. R., 7 All., 553, referred to, and the judgments of the minority of the Court in the latter case approved. *Khiali Ram v. 4. ———— Ex-proprietary tenant—Ex-proprietary tenancy arising on sale of part of the zamindar's share.—In order that the provisions of s. 7 of Act XII of 1881 may come into operation, it is not necessary that the zamindar should lose or part with his proprietary rights in respect of the whole of his interest in the mehal. BHAWANI PRASAD v. GHULAM MUHAMMED. . . I. L. R., 18 All., 121

MURLIDHAR v. PEMRAJ. I. L. R., 22 All., 205

5. ———— Ex-proprietary tenancy.—The words "held by him as sir" in s. 7 of Act XII of 1881 (N.-W. P. Rent Act) must be construed to mean land belonging to him, or to which he was entitled, as sir, and as literal an interpretation should be placed upon these words as is consistent with the canons of construction. In 1879 one of the defendants sold a one-third share of certain sir land in a village to the plaintiff, who, at that time, was in cultivatory possession thereof under a deed of mortgage executed in his favour by the same defendant in 1877. The plaintiff alleged that, after the sale, he continued in possession of the sir land till 1884, when he was dispossessed thereof by the defendants. He sued for recovery of possession of the land. Held that the defendants, being ex-proprietary tenants of the land in dispute, were entitled to hold possession thereof, by operation of law, with reference to the terms of s. 7 of the N.-W. P. Rent Act; and the plaintiff's contention that because for four or five years the defendants failed to assert their ex-proprietary tenant rights, they were debarred from doing so, could only be well founded if there had been any provision either in the Limitation Act or the Rent Act creating such a disability. Held also that, notwithstanding the fact that the plaintiff was in possession of the land in dispute as mortgagee at the time of the sale, and continued in possession afterwards, his vendor must be taken to have "held" the land as his sir at the time of the sale of his proprietary interest, within the meaning of s. 7 of the Rent Act. HARJAS v. BADHA KISHAN [I. L. R., 8 All., 256

6. ———— Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 41, 48—Transfer by ostensible owner—Meaning of "held"—Statute, Construction of—Retrospective effect—Mortgage of sir land before passing of Act XVIII of 1873—Sale of mortgagor's rights while that Act was in force—Right of mortgagee.—In 1879 A and J, two co-sharers of a moiety of a 10 biswas share in a village (F and W being also co-sharers in the same moiety), joined with H, the holder of the other moiety, in giving to K a usufructuary mortgage of 87 bighas of land, being the whole of the sir land appertaining to the 10 biswas share. The deed of mortgage authorized the mortgagee to retain possession of the land until payment of the mortgage-money and to receive profits in lieu of interest; and he obtained possession accordingly. In 1872 F, W, and A gave to other persons a usufructuary mortgage of their 5 biswas share together with a moiety of the 87 bighas of sir land; and it was stated in the deed that half the mortgage-money due to K on the mortgage of 1869 was due by the executants, and that they accordingly left the same with the mortgagees in order that the latter might redeem. In November 1876 H's 5 biswas share, together with its sir land, was sold in execution of a decree. Subsequently, K, alleging that the mortgagees under the deed of 1872 and the purchasers under the execution-sale of 1876 had dispossessed him, and that his mortgage-debt had not been paid, sued to recover possession of the 87 bighas of sir land, by virtue of his mortgage-deed of 1869. The Court of first instance held that the plaintiff was not entitled to enforce his mortgage in respect of F's and W's share in the 87 bighas, because they were not parties to the deed of 1869. The lower Appellate Court further held that from the date of the execution-sale of November 1876 H became an ex-proprietary tenant of his sir land, and that to give the plaintiff possession thereof would be contrary to the provisions of s. 7 of Act XVIII of 1873 (N.-W. P. Rent Act). Held that, inasmuch as it was clear that at the time when the mortgage-deed of 1869 was executed F and W were aware of the transaction which made K, the mortgagee, under the deed, of the whole property, and that, knowing this, they allowed the possession of A, J, and H to appear as if covering the entire zamindari rights in the 10 biswas share of the sir land, and inasmuch as the statements contained in the mortgage-deed of 1872 were an admission on the part of F and W that the mortgage of 1869 was executed with their consent, the equitable doctrine contained in s. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act applied to the case and F and W had no defence, either in law or in equity, to the plaintiff's suit, with reference to their shares, and for the purpose of obviating the lien of 1869. Ramcoomar Koondoo v. McQueen, 11 B. L. R., 46, referred to. Per MAHMOOD, J., with reference to the effect of the execution-sale of November 1876, in regard to the provisions of s. 7 of Act XVIII of 1873, that the general rule that statutory provisions have no retrospective operation did not apply to the case; that, by reason of the sale, H, who had proprietary rights in the mehal, and held the 5 biswas share of the sir as such (the word "held" as used in s. 7 of the Rent Act not being confined to manual or physical holding), lost his proprietary rights, and so became an ex-proprietary tenant of the land belonging to him at that time; that although the mortgage of 1869 must not be so affected as to deprive the mortgagee of all his rights, yet by the terms of s. 7 of Act XVIII of 1873 and by virtue of the sale his means of benefiting by the mortgage were necessarily changed; that neither the preamble nor s. 1 of the Act contained any saving clause which would justify the interpretation that all the conditions included in a usufructuary mortgage are to be exempted from the operation of the Act, or of s. 7 in particular, merely because the mortgage was a subsisting one: that under these circumstances possession must be given to the plaintiff of such rights as H had at the time of the mortgage, subject only to H's rights as an ex-proprietary tenant;

that the rights of the purchaser of H's share under the sale were subject to the mortgage of 1869; and that by virtue of the rule enunciated in s. 48 of the Transfer of Property Act, the rights of the mortgagees under the deed of 1872 must give way to the incidents of the prior deed of 1869, both mortgages being usufructuary. Tulshi v. Radha Kishan, Weekly Notes, Ali., 1886, p. 74, referred to. Per TYRELL, J., that in 1876, by reason of the execution sale, the sir rights and interests of H mortgaged by him in 1869, as such, went out of existence, and assumed a different character; that over that tenure in its altered character the plaintiff, though he still had his mortgage charge, had not, in the existing state of the law, a right to physical possession of the actual land; and that, subject to this new right of H's, the plaintiff retained his mortgage charge of 1869 over the zamindari interest in the portion of the land acquired by H's vendees. KARAMAT KHAN v. SAMI-UD-DIN . . . I. L. R., 8 All., 409.

7. ——— and s. 14—Suit for profits—Ex-proprietary tenant—Sir land held equally.—A certain mehal, of which the plaintiff in this suit claimed a one-third share of the profits for a certain year, belonged in equal shares to the defendant (lambardar), and S and E, his two brothers, who had certain sir land in partnership. The plaintiff had acquired the share of S by auction-purchase, S thus becoming an ex-proprietary tenant. The sir land was not included in the rent-roll of the mehal, but was admitted by the defendant to be assessable with rent at a certain rate per bigha. Held that, whatever might be the course proper to be taken for the purpose of assessing such sir land or S's share of it with rent, and notwithstanding that such course had not been taken, the plaintiff was entitled in this suit to claim and obtain his share in the profits of the sir land. *MUHAMMAD ALI v. The suit was struck off on account of the non-appearance of the parties under s. 140 of Act XII of 1881 (N.-W. P. Rent Act), with leave to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit. An arrear of assigned revenue is not a prior charge on the property in respect of which it is payable, against all the world. The effect of the provisions of ss. 93 (i), 171, and 177 of the N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881) is to show that what the Legislature contemplated was to place the revenue assigned to a musafidar upon the same footing as rent; that therefore, in order to recover an arrear of revenue, a musafidar must bring a suit in the Revenue Court; that, upon obtaining a decree, he may apply for execution against the immoveable property of the judgment-debtor; that where such property is a mehal, the Collector may make certain arrangements for discharge of the debt; and that, failing such arrangements, such immoveable property may be sold, subject to any incumbrances there may be upon it. L. ——— Land in mehal held by the lambardar as "khud-kasht" at a nominal rental — Liability of lambardar to co-sharer for profits.—The land in a certain mehal was recorded as held by M, the lambardar as "khud-kasht" at a certain nominal rental. For two years in succession M sublet such land in part or in whole for a less amount than such nominal rental; the third year such land lay fallow. Certain persons sued as co-sharers in the mehal to recover from M their share of the profits on account of such years. M set up as a defence to the suit that there were no profits—on the contrary, a small loss. The lower Courts held M answerable for the rental recorded. Held that it was doubtful whether the provisions of s. 209 of Act XVIII of 1873 were applicable in the present case, and that, even if such provisions were applicable, the lower Courts having neither found that more was realized from the land than had been accounted for by M, nor that the failure to realize more was owing to gross negligence or misconduct on his part, the decree of the lower Courts could not be sustained. 1. Suit against Committee for declaration of right—Right of suit.—Semble—S. 43 of Act XV of 1873 contemplates suits in which relief of a pecuniary character is claimed for some act done under that Act by a Committee, or any of their officers, or any other person acting under their direction, and for which damages can be recovered from them personally, and not a suit against a Committee for a declaration of the plaintiffs' right to reconstruct a building which has been demolished by the order of such Committee and for compensation for such demolition. MANNI KASAUDHAN v. CROOKS . . . I. L. R., 2 All., 296

2. Suit against Municipal Committee—Claim for a declaration of right—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 120—Cause of action.—The lessee of certain land belonging to the plaintiffs, situate within the limits of a municipality, applied to the Municipal Committee for permission to establish a market on such land, and such permission was refused by the Committee on the 26th November 1878. Meanwhile, the plaintiffs, on behalf of the lessee and on their own behalf as proprietors of such land, applied to the Committee for such permission, sending such application by post. No orders were passed by the Committee on such application because it had come by post. On the 18th April 1879 the plaintiffs sued the Committee for a declaration of their right to establish a market on such land, and for a perpetual injunction restraining the Collector as President of the Committee from interfering with their so doing. The cause of action alleged was the refusal of the Committee of the 26th November 1878. Held by STUART, C.J., on the question whether such suit was barred by the provisions of s. 43 of Act XV of 1873, not having been brought within three months next after the date of the alleged cause of action, that it was not so barred, inasmuch as the provisions of that section were only applicable to suits brought against a Committee for something done under that Act in which compensation was claimed, and not to those in which compensation was not claimed; and that therefore the present suit was not governed by the provisions of that section, but by art. 120, sch. II of Act XV of 1877. Also, that the rejection of the lessee's application gave the plaintiffs a cause of action, as there was privity between them and the lessee; and that, as there was nothing in the Municipal rules prohibiting the presentation of an application by post, the application of the plaintiffs should not have been rejected. Held by DUTHOIT, J., that the suit of the plaintiffs was governed by the provisions of s. 43 of Act XV of 1873, and was therefore beyond time. Municipal Committee of Moradabad v. Chatri Singh, I. L. R., 1 All., 269; Manni Kasaudhan v. Crooks, I. L. R., 2 All., 296; and Chander Sikkur Bundopadhyas v. Obhoy Churn Bagchi, I. L. R., 6 Calc., 8, referred to. BIJU MOHAN SINGH v. COLLECTOR OF ALLAHABAD

[I. L. R., 4 All., 102

Held by the Full Bench (reversing the decision of DUTHOIT, J., and affirming that of STUART, C.J.) that such suit was not barred by limitation under the provisions of s. 43 of Act XV of 1873, because it had not been brought within three months after the date of the alleged cause of action, inasmuch as the provisions of the section were only applicable to suits brought against a Committee for something done under the Act in which compensation was claimed, and not to those in which compensation was not claimed. Held also by the Full Bench (confirming the decision of STUART, C.J.) that the refusal of the Municipal Committee to allow the plaintiffs' lessee to establish the market gave them a cause of action. BIJU MOHAN SINGH v. OF 1883)—continued.

1. ——— s. 55—Municipal Board—Power of Municipal Boards to frame bye-laws N.-W. P. and Odh Municipalities Act (XV of 1878), s. 29 —Nuisance.—Cl. (c) of s. 55 of Act XV of 1883 was not intended to empower a Municipal Board to make rules which would enable it to confiscate private rights without making any compensation, or to treat as nuisances acts which are not in law or with regard to public health or convenience capable of being considered nuisances. The clause was meant to give to Municipal Boards power to make rules for prohibiting the establishment of markets, that is, to prevent new markets being established, and to give them power to control the maintenance of existing markets or of markets which might be established with their sanction. By "maintenance" is meant the keeping up of a market in such a manner as would make it a fit place for the carrying on of a market having regard to public health and public convenience. GANGA NARAIN v. MUNICIPAL BOARD OF CANNING . . . I. L. R., 19 All., 313

2. ——— Municipal bye-law, Presumption as to validity of.—Where a person was tried for and convicted of a breach of certain bye-laws purporting to have been duly passed by a Municipal Board, it was held that the presumption was that such bye-laws had been passed with due regard to the necessary procedure and were not illegal, and that it lay upon the accused to object to their validity, and was no part of the duty of a Court exercising appellate or revisional jurisdiction to enter of its own motion into the question whether such rules had been properly framed in accordance with the provisions of the law on that subject. Municipality of Sholapur v. Sholapur Spinning and Weaving Co., I. L. R., 20 Bom., 752, referred to. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAM CHANDAR . . . I. L. R., 19 All., 493

1. ——— s. 69—Complaint of offence against Municipal bye-law—Power of Municipal Board to give a general authority to institute complaints on its behalf.—Held that s. 69 of the N.-W. P. and Odh Municipalities Act, 1883, confers upon Municipal Boards in the N.-W. P. and Odh the power to delegate generally their authority to make complaints in respect of municipal offences, and this general delegation includes not merely the giving of authority to do the formal act of presenting a complaint to a Court, but the exercise of discretion as to whether in any given case a complaint shall or shall not be made. POWELL v. MUNICIPAL BOARD OF MUSSOORIE [I. L. R., 22 All., 123

2. ——— and s. 71—Municipal rules—Infringement of rules—Prosecutions—N.-W. P. Government Notification No. 865, dated the 3rd November 1869—Rule VI, Legality of.—Municipal Boards and Magistrates should see that, before prosecutions are instituted under the municipal rules, care is taken that the requirements of s. 69 of Act XV of 1883 (N.-W. P. and Odh Municipalities Act) are satisfied. A District Magistrate, who was also Chairman of a Municipal Board, having information that a certain person had evaded the payment of octroi duty, directed his prosecution for breach of municipal rules. The Magistrate, in thus causing proceedings to be taken, acted wholly of his own motion and authority. The accused was tried and convicted under Rule 6, Government, N.-W. P., Notification No. 865, dated the 3rd November 1869, read with s. 45 of Act XV of 1873 (N.-W. P. and Odh Municipalities Act). This rule provided that any person evading or abetting the evasion of the octroi duties specified in a schedule should be deemed to have committed an infringement of a bye-law. It purported to have been made under s. 12 of Act VI of 1868 (Municipal Improvements Act, N.-W. P.), which authorized the making of "rules as to the persons by whom, and the manner in which, any assessment of taxes under this Act shall be confirmed, and for the collection of such taxes." Held that, assuming the rule to have been legally made under s. 12 of Act VI of 1868, which was not clear, and that it was saved by s. 2 of Act XV of 1873, it would, as declared in s. 71 of Act XV of 1883 (N.-W. P. and Odh Municipalities Act), continue in force until repealed by new rules made under such last-mentioned Act, and be deemed to have been made under that Act, and its operation was therefore subject to the provisions of that Act, and among them to s. 69, which made it a condition precedent to the institution of a prosecution against the petitioner, that there should be a complaint of the Municipal Board or of some person authorized by the Board in that behalf. Held that the position of the Magistrate of the district in connection with s. 69 was neither better nor worse than that of any other member of the Board, and unless he had been duly authorized by the Board as a Board, he had no more locus standi to cause a prosecution to be instituted personally than any other individual member; and the words of s. 69 being mandatory, and the petitioner having from the outset urged this objection to the legality of the proceedings, he was entitled to the benefit of it now, and the conviction was illegal and must be set aside. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 1. MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

1. ——— Order forbidding nuisance—Power of Magistrate—Town Improvement Act (XXVI of 1950).—Held that a Magistrate, as President of a Municipal Committee, had no power to issue an order forbidding as a nuisance an act not included in the rules passed under Act XXVI of 1950. GOVERNMENT v. SHAMISOONDER . 1 Agra, Cr., 34

2. ——— Order prohibiting traffic—Bom. Reg. XII of 1827, s. 19.—A notice prohibiting general traffic over certain level-crossings on a railway, provided for particular villages, forbidden, as not falling within the scope of Regulation XII of 1827, s. 19, cls. 1 and 6. IN THE MATTER OF A PROHIBITORY NOTICE UNDER BOMBAY REGULATION XII OF 1827 . . . 8 Bom., Cr., 28

NUISANCE—continued.2. UNDER CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODES.

3. ——— Order to close drain—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, ss. 62, 308—Power of Magistrate—Order not in writing.—The accused was fined by the Magistrate for not having closed a drain in pursuance of the verbal order of the Magistrate. Held that the Magistrate should have proceeded under Ch. XX, Act XXV of 1861, inasmuch as the nuisance was not one from which immediate danger was apprehended, and not under s. 62, which empowered the Magistrate to put an immediate determination to the continuance thereof. A written order not having been given, the procedure was faulty, and therefore quashed. Only Magistrates of a district or division can act under Ch. XX, s. 308. GOVERNMENT v. CHOONERALL . . . 2 Agra, Cr., 1

4. ——— Assistant Magistrate, Power of—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, ss. 62, 308—Penal Code, s. 188.—An Assistant Magistrate, as he came within the definition of the term of "any Magistrate," was competent to pass an order under s. 62 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, which contemplated circumstances under which an immediate order is urgently required, and in this respect differed from s. 308 of that enactment, and that it should be read alone with s. 188 of the Penal Code. GOVERNMENT v. MAHOMED BUKSH . 1 Agra, Cr., 23

5. ——— Order to prevent breach of the peace—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, ss. 62, 313.—It was not necessary that an order issued by a Magistrate under s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, whereby a breach of the peace was prevented, should be supplemented by a proceeding under s. 313 of the same Code. QUEEN v. LUTEEF HOSSEIN
[10 W. R., Cr., 1]

6. ——— Order made on dismissal of complaint—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, ss. 62, 308.—Where a Magistrate dismissed a complaint under s. 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it was held that it was competent for him to pass an order under s. 62 of that Code in the same case, provided he called on the defendant to show cause why s. 62 should not be applied. *KALIDAS BHUTTACHARJEE v. 7. ——— Requisites of order—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 62—General and continuous order.—Under Act XXV of 1861, s. 62, it was necessary that the direction should be addressed to a particular person or particular persons, and not to the public generally, and with reference to a particular occasion only, and not for a continuance. ANONYMOUS . 8 Mad., Ap., 9

8. ——— Notice and inquiry—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 62—Order without notice or inquiry.—An order issued by a Magistrate under s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in consequence of a mahirzanama signed by certain persons but without any notice to the defendant or inquiry by the Magistrate is illegal. ANONYMOUS . . . 4 Mad., Ap., 87

10. ———— Ground necessary for order—Power of Magistrate to make prohibitory orders as to nuisance.—When a Magistrate makes an order under s. 518, Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, on the ground that he has received information, and is satisfied with it, no interference is possible; but when he states the nature of the information, the High Court can see whether such information justifies the order made. Before a prohibitory order under s. 518 can be made, there ought to be information or evidence before the Magistrate that the act prohibited was likely to cause a riot or affray, and that the stoppage of that act would prevent such riot or affray. GOSHAIN LUCHMUN PERSHAD POOREE v. POHOOF NARAIN POOREE . . . 24 W. R., Cr., 80

11. ———— Condition precedent to making of order—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 518, expl. 1.—The existence of the circumstances mentioned in explanation 1 is a condition precedent to the action of a Magistrate, under s. 518, Code of Criminal Procedure. IN THE MATTER OF KRISHNA MOHUN BYSAK . . . 1 C. 12. ———— Ground for making order—Criminal Procedure Code (XXV of 1861), s. 62—Act X of 1872, s. 518—Power of Magistrate—Procedure—Report of police.—There is nothing in s. 62, Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, to justify a Magistrate in making an order under that section on the mere report of a police officer. *QUEEN v. 14. ———— Nature of order—Perpetual injunction—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 518—Powers of Magistrate—Rival hats.—A Magistrate is not empowered to pass an order under s. 518 of Act X of 1872 which has more than a temporary operation: the grant of what is in effect an order for a perpetual injunction is entirely beyond his powers. GOPH MOHUN MULLICK v. TARAMONI CHOWDHRAHI [I. L. R., 5 Cal., 7; 4 C. L. R., 309]

15. ———— Perpetual injunction—Magistrate, Power of.—A Magistrate has no power to pass a perpetual injunction under s. 518 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1872. *Gopi Mohun Mullick v. 16. ———— Duration of Magistrate's order—Criminal Procedure Code (1872), s. 518 (1882, s. 144)—Penal Code, s. 188.—In 1876 a Magistrate passed an order under s. 518 of Act X of 1872 (Criminal Procedure Code), directing the Saraogis of Etah to take one of their annual religious processions along a particular route and at a particular hour. In 1886, in which year there was no fresh promulgation of the order, the Saraogis took their procession along another route and at a different hour, and for so doing some of them were convicted and sentenced under s. 188 of the Penal Code. Held that the conviction was wrong, the order of 1876 having a temporary operation only. Gopi Mohun Mullick v. Taramoni Chowdhrahi, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 7, referred to. QUEEN v. EXPRESS SHEKHODIN . . . I. L. R., 10 All., 115

17. ———— Order for protection of property—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 518.—A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to make an order under s. 518 of the Code of Criminal Procedure merely for the protection of property. *IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF PRAYAG SINGH EMPRESS v. nuisances and other similar matters in which immediate action is necessary, in order to avoid a risk of illegal consequences. RAJ BULLUB ADDHYA v. GOHINDO CHUNDER MOITRO 12 W. R., Cr., 66

20. ——— Order as to moveable property—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 62—Likelihood of breach of the peace.—The power of issuing orders to prevent breaches of the peace, etc., conferred on a Magistrate by s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, extends only to immoveable property of the description set forth in Ch. XXII of that Code. QUEEN v. GOLOUX CHUNDER GOHO [12 W. R., Cr., 38]

21. ——— Private dispute as to pathway—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 62.—S. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not apply to a private dispute between two parties relative to a path. NILKOMUL MOOKHOPADHYA v. ANUND CHUNDER LUSHKUR 19 W. R., Cr., 6

22. ——— Dispute as to interest in land—Question for Civil Court—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 62.—The purchaser of an interest in land at a sale in execution of decree obtained an order for possession under s. 263 or 264, Act VIII of 1859, and a dispute arose between him and another person who had some interest in the land, as to what passed under the sale certificate. Without ascertaining the rights of the parties, the Magistrate made certain orders, the effect of which was to exclude the auction-purchaser for some time from exercising the right alleged to have passed to him under the purchase. Held that the Magistrate ought to have made no order at all with reference to the property, leaving it to the parties to determine their rights in the Civil Court, and that he had ample power under the section to do what was necessary to prevent a breach of the peace. LALOO v. ADAM SINGAR. GOVERNMENT v. SUBJAKANT ACHARYA. DENGGO SHAIKH v. ADAM SINGAR 17 W. R., Cr., 37

23. ——— Order for removal of wall—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 62.—S. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not authorize a Magistrate summarily to direct a person to remove a wall erected on land alleged to belong to another person in the absence of evidence showing that a riot or affray was likely to occur. RADHAKISHORE v. GRIEDHAREE SAHRE 13 W. R., Cr., 19

24. ——— Order for removal of buildings—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 62.—Orders by Subordinate Magistrates in one case directing the removal of a house on the ground that it was in a dangerous and dilapidated condition, and in the other directing the removal of a granary on the ground that it had been improperly erected upon land required to be kept unoccupied for common purposes, were set aside by the High Court because the Subordinate Magistrate acted without jurisdiction. ANONYMOUS [4 Mad., Ap., 34]

25. ——— Order for removal of obstruction—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, ss. 518,

NUISANCE—continued.

521.—A Magistrate of the second class having passed an order under the Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 518, for the removal of an obstruction, the Magistrate on appeal held that, though the proceedings of the Subordinate Magistrate were without jurisdiction, he (the Magistrate) was competent under s. 518 to direct the removal of the obstruction, and he passed an order accordingly. Held that the order of the Magistrate under s. 518 was illegal, and that he should have proceeded under s. 521 and the following sections of the Code. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF BRINDABAN DUTT 21 W. R., Cr., 24

26. ——— Dispute as to right of possession—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 518—Breach of peace imminent—Order not to interfere with a temple.—Where a dispute arises as to the right of the possession of lands and buildings, a Magistrate, if he considers a collision between the parties and a serious breach of the peace imminent, may properly proceed under Ch. 39, instead of Ch. 40, of the Criminal Procedure Code. If the Magistrate had jurisdiction, the proceedings, not being judicial, cannot be revised by the High Court. An order to abstain from interference with a temple and its property is an order to abstain from a "certain act" within the meaning of s. 518 of the Criminal Procedure Code. ELAVARISU VANAMAMALAI RAMANUJA JENYARVAMI v. VANAMAMALAI RAMANUJA JENYAR [1 L. R., S. Mad., 354]

27. ——— Order to alter doorway of temple—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 62.—The temple of Pandharpur, a public temple, is visited at certain periods of the year by a large concourse of pilgrims. With a view to prevent the dangers arising from overcrowding, and to improve the ventilation, the Magistrate, by a written order, under s. 62 of the Criminal Procedure Code, directed the hereditary priests of the temple to widen and heighten the doorway. Held that such order was legal under the above section. Seemle—That the case would have been the same had the temple been private property; and also that the power of Magistrates to issue orders under the section in question is entirely discretionary. REG. v. RAM CHANDEA KENATH 6 Bom., Cr., 36

28. ——— Power of Magistrate to order repair of a house not adjoining the public road—Criminal Procedure Code (1882), ss. 133, 135, and 136—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 188.—S. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not empower a Magistrate to order the owner of a house standing apart from any public road in its own compound to repair such house. By "persons living or carrying on business in the neighbourhood," injury to whom the power to pass orders under s. 133 is intended to prevent, are meant, not the persons who in the exercise of their private rights may use a building supposed to be in a dangerous condition, but unascertained members of the public whose ordinary avocations may take them to the neighbourhood of such building. Queen-Empress

29. ——— Disputed possession of temple—Criminal Procedure Code (1882), s. 144—Magistrate, Jurisdiction of.—The District Temple Committee dismissed the trustees of a certain temple and appointed others. The dismissed trustees retained possession. A breach of the peace having become imminent in the opinion of a Deputy Magistrate, he made an order, under the Criminal Procedure Code, s. 144, directing the newly-appointed trustees not to interfere with the temple or its management. Held that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to make the order, and the High Court declined to interfere on revision. PALANIAPPA CHETTI v. DORASAMI AYYAR

[I. L. R., 18 Mad., 402]

30. ——— Order as to procession in public streets—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 518—Public worship—Conflict of rights—Duty of Magistrate when public peace threatened.—In affording special protection to persons assembled for religious worship or religious ceremonies, the law points to congregational rather than private worship, and it may fairly be required of congregations that they should inform the Magistrate or police at what hours they customarily assemble for worship, in order that the rights of other persons may not be unduly curtailed. No sect is entitled to deprive others for ever of the right to use the public streets for processions, on the plea of the sanctity of their place of worship, or on the plea that worship is carried on therein day and night. The duties of a Magistrate in cases where the public peace is likely to be disturbed by one sect attempting to prevent another from using the public streets for processions, discussed. The principles laid down in Mutheale Chetti v. Bapua Saib, I. L. R., 2 Mad., 140, examined, explained, and approved. SUNDRAM v. QUEEN. PONNUSAMI v. QUEEN

[I. L. R., 6 Mad., 203]

31. ——— Order to remove embankment—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 62.—The Subordinate Magistrate issued an order to two persons directing them to remove a certain embankment, whereby the adjacent lands of the complainant were in danger of being flooded. Held that the act of the defendant was not an act which could be prohibited by the Subordinate Magistrate under s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. ANONYMOUS

[5 Mad., Ap., 19]

32. ——— Order to destroy tank—Obstruction to enjoyment of public rights.—The defendant had made a tank in the bed of a khal by throwing two bunds across it, and on complaint to the Magistrate, he, finding that the tank had been in existence only for about six years, passed an order under s. 62, Act XXV of 1861, directing the defendant to destroy the bunds, on the ground that they were an obstruction to the enjoyment of the river by the public in the rainy season; and that the bunds interfered with the drainage of the country and tended to the injury of the crops and of the inhabitants. The High Court held that s. 62 did not authorize the passing of such an order. QUEEN v. GOLAM DARBESH

33. ——— Trespass by cattle—Penal Code, s. 188.—A Magistrate issued an order warning owners of cattle to take proper care of them; and that in case of disobedience or neglect they would be punished according to law, and did punish them for disobedience under s. 188 of the Penal Code. Held that the Magistrate was not competent, under s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1861, to pass such an order. The order contemplated under that section is in the nature of an injunction, and such an order passed by a Magistrate would not be legal. The conviction under s. 188 of the Penal Code was therefore illegal. IN THE MATTER OF AMIRADDI

in the opinion of the Magistrate, the delay which would be caused by adopting a different procedure from that specified in the explanation to that section would "occasion a greater evil than that suffered by the person on whom the order is made or would defeat the intention of this (39th) Chapter." Where a Magistrate, without hearing the petitioner or giving him an opportunity of being heard, and simply on the foundation of a police officer's report, directed the petitioner to abstain from holding a hât upon his land on a certain day because another party had long been accustomed to hold a hât on his land adjacent to the petitioner's hât on the day following that on which the petitioner held his hât, it was held that his order passed under s. 518 was ultra vires, the police officer's report being vague and insufficient, and a private interest of this kind not affording a ground for making an order under s. 518 or any other order under the Criminal Procedure Code. *BANER MADHUB GHOSH v. The order was duly made and promulgated, but not strictly in accordance with s. 134 of the Code, and the orders of Government made thereunder. Notwithstanding the order, one P C A was found exposing goods for sale as a trader at the hât on one of the prohibited days, and he was thereupon charged with disobeying the order of the Magistrate, and convicted of an offence under s. 188 of the Penal Code. A Magistrate cannot take upon himself to decide questions of fact and Mahomedan law, so as to satisfy himself as to what are the actual rights of the parties to the lands in dispute. If he has good reasons to believe that such a dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace, the law enables him to ascertain and maintain actual possession, or, if it is shewn that the members of the family are inclined to break the peace, he can bind them all over to keep the peace. Where there was a dispute between the parties, who were related to one another as to the amount of their shares to certain property which was claimed on the one hand to be joint in certain shares, and on the other hand to exclusively belong to the other party, and no proceedings had been taken under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, nor was there anything to show that there was any probability of a breach of the peace, the Magistrate passed the following order: "The applicants must not plough more than 12 annas of the land." Held that such an order could not properly fall within s. 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as an order under that section could only be passed on some emergency and would have effect for only two months. The present order in its operation would have effect, and was intended to have effect, until the parties went to a Civil Court to settle their disputes, and no emergency was even suggested. No unconditional order can be made under that section. EMPRESS v. BROJOKANT ROY CHOWDERY I. L. R., 9 Calc., 637

83. ——— Opportunity to show cause—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, ss. 521, 525, 528.—An order by a Magistrate under s. 521, Act X of 1872, for the removal of a nuisance does not become absolute until an opportunity is given to the person affected by it to show cause why the order should not be carried into effect. No order can be made under s. 528 of the Code unless there is imminent danger or fear of injury of a serious kind to the public involved in the case; and where a Magistrate who had made an order under s. 521 subsequently directed further inquiry to be made, it was held that he must be considered to have abandoned his proceedings under s. 528, and that he should have proceeded under s. 528 instead of fining the party charged under s. 188 of the Penal Code. QUEEN v. 84. ——— Obstruction in public way—Inquiry under s. 133, Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882)—Previous orders when no bar to such inquiry.—An application was made under s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) for the removal of an obstruction in a public thoroughfare, but after a personal local inspection by the Magistrate and without any evidence being taken, the parties were referred to a civil suit, and the order was refused, the Magistrate holding that the way was not a public way. A civil suit was then filed, and during its pendency a second application was made under s. 133 of Act X of 1882, with a like object, which was refused on the ground that the civil suit was pending, and that there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace. The civil suit resulted in the way being held to be a public thoroughfare. A third application was then made under s. 133 to have the obstruction removed, but the Magistrate held that in face of the two previous orders he could not interfere. Held that the order of the Magistrate was wrong, upon the ground that he was bound to make such inquiry, and as there never had been any inquiry into the matter, the first decision being no decision at all, but a mere dictum of the Magistrate upon a personal local investigation without hearing evidence, and thus not on judicial inquiry, and the second decision being based merely upon the pendency of the civil suit and the previous improper order, and that neither of these orders operated therefore as a bar to the Magistrate inquiring into the matter of the present complaint. MAKHAN LALL SAHA v. 85. ———— Order calling on party to appear and show cause—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 308—Removal of nuisance—Filling up tank.—Held that a Magistrate cannot proceed to pass an order for the removal of a nuisance, under s. 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, without calling on the party to show cause why the order should not be passed against him, and without hearing the objections, even if they are filed after the time fixed for their presentation, but before he takes up the case. A Magistrate's power to fill up a tank is by s. 308 limited to having it fenced in; but where the tank is proved to be injurious to the community, he may under that section treat it as a public nuisance, and cause it to be filled up. QUEEN v. 93. — Order to pull down house—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 308—Report of jurors—Illegal order—Obstruction to public way.—The Magistrate of a district issued an order, under s. 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, calling upon the petitioner to remove a building, on the ground that it was unlawful obstruction upon a high road. A jury of five persons was appointed by the Magistrate's successor, under s. 310, to report within fifteen days whether the order was reasonable and proper. The jurors, being without instruction, took different views as to the performance of their duties; but four of them visited the premises, and were unanimous in finding that the building complained of was not on the high road at all. Five days after receiving reports to this effect, the Magistrate issued another order to the petitioner, requiring him to pull down his house within fifteen days, as the jurors had made no report within the time prescribed. The petitioner showed cause under s. 313, but without effect, and the order was repeated. The proceedings were ultimately forwarded to the Sessions Judge, whose successor in office returned them with the remark that nothing appeared to have been done contrary to the law for the removal of nuisances. Held that the petitioner had shown sufficient cause to satisfy the Magistrate, under s. 313, that the order to pull down the house was not reasonable and proper. RNG. v. 94. — Nuisance caused by tank—

Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 308—Removal of tank.—The order of a Magistrate under s. 308, Code of Criminal Procedure, should be confined to a direction to remove the nuisance complained of. In the case of a tank, the Magistrate cannot order the proprietor to excavate it. The proprietor ought to have the discretion allowed him as to the mode in which he will remove the nuisance caused by the tank. If a Magistrate is compelled to direct the excavation of the tank, the actual cost of excavation can alone be charged against the proprietor, at whose disposition the soil taken out in the course of excavation must be placed. IN THE MATTER OF PAUL DOSS

96. — Functions of jury—Obstruction—Public thoroughfare—Procedure.—Before a Magistrate can make an order under s. 521 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to remove an obstruction from a path alleged to be a public thoroughfare, he must first, in a proceeding held under s. 532, have come to the conclusion that the path is open to the use of the public. The only functions which a jury appointed under s. 523 can exercise are to consider whether the order made by the Magistrate under s. 521 is reasonable and proper, it being no part of their duty to determine the rights of parties in property. Held therefore that where a Magistrate, through a mistaken view of the law, ordered the removal of an obstruction on a pathway under s. 521, and had further submitted this order to the consideration of a jury appointed under s. 523, before he had himself come to a conclusion whether such pathway was a public thoroughfare, the only course left open to him under such circumstances was to stay all proceedings initiated under s. 521, and take action under s. 532. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF CHUNDER NATH SEN

97. — Nuisance, Order for the removal of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 133—Bond fide claim—Jurisdiction of Magistrate and of jury.—Where in a proceeding under s. 133, Criminal Procedure Code, the petitioner appeared and objected, on the following amongst other grounds, that there was no pathway and no right of way open to the public over the land which belonged to him,—Held that the Magistrate ought to have determined where the objection was bond fide before he took further action, and this was not a matter which could be properly considered by a jury. BUDHAI NATH v. 98. — Obstruction of public ways—Dispute as to public right.—The powers embodied in ss. 133, '34, '35, '36, '37 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, with regard to the obstruction of public ways are not intended to be exercised where there is a bond fide dispute as to the existence of the public right. Where there is such a dispute, the Court should pass no order under those sections until the public right has been established by proper legal proceedings, civil or criminal. BASARUDDIN BHUIAH v. The section contemplates only an enquiry as to the existence or non-existence of the obstruction complained of, not an enquiry into disputed questions of title. ASKAR MEA v. SARDAR MEA . . . I. question of title—Jurisdiction of Magistrate and jury in such cases.—Upon the institution of proceedings under s. 133, Criminal Procedure Code, the opposite party raised the contention that the way alleged to be obstructed was not one which is or may be lawfully used by the public. The Magistrate, without dealing with this objection, referred it to a jury, and upon receiving their report that it was a reasonable and proper order, he directed the removal of the obstruction. Held that the Magistrate should have found whether the objection taken was a bond fide one, and if he found it to be so, he should have abstained from further action until the public right of way had been determined by a competent Court. Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee, I. L. R., 15 Calc., 564, followed. The jury was not competent to decide whether the way alleged to be obstructed was public or not, for the decision of this matter affected the right of the Magistrate to interfere under s. 133, and it is only when the Magistrate is competent to pass an order under the section that a jury can be appointed to consider whether it is a reasonable and proper order. Where the Magistrate had not expressly found that the objection was made bond fide, but the police report made by his order contained ample reason for such finding, the High Court set aside the order under s. 139 as ultra vires. *NASARUDDI v. under s. 290 of the Penal Code of committing a public nuisance, on the ground that their act was certain to cause annoyance to the Hindu inhabitants of the village whose temples were in the vicinity, and was therefore calculated to lead to a breach of the public peace. Held that the conviction was illegal. MUTUMIRA v. QUEEN-EMPERESS I. L. R., 7 Mad., 590

123. ——— Repeating or continuing public nuisance—Penal Code, s. 291—Injunction by public servant not to repeat or continue—Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 134, 143, 144, sch. V, form 20.—To support a conviction under s. 291 of the Penal Code, there must be proof of an injunction to the accused individually against repeating or continuing the same particular public nuisance. It must be shown that the person convicted had on some previous occasion committed the particular nuisance, had been enjoined not to repeat or continue it, and had repeated or continued it. The authority under which a Magistrate can order or enjoin a person against repeating or continuing a public nuisance is s. 143 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is the infringement of this order that is punishable under s. 291 of the Penal Code. What is contemplated is an order addressed to a particular person. A Magistrate's powers to deal with public nuisances are contained in Chs. X and XI of the Criminal Procedure Code. Chapter XI is only properly applicable to temporary orders in urgent cases. It is only in such cases that an order may be made ex-parte, and any exception is allowed to the general rule that it shall be directed to a particular individual. In such emergent cases an order may, under s. 144 of the Code, be directed to the public generally, when frequenting or visiting a particular place, to abstain from a certain act; but this provision does not apply to a proclamation directed not to the public generally frequenting or visiting a particular place, but to a portion of the community. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. JOKHU I. L. R., 8 All., 99

124. ——— Annoyance to a particular religious sect—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 268 and 290—Private nuisance.—The accused cut up, on his verandah, meat that was to be cooked for a dinner party, exposing it to the sight of persons passing along the road, among whom were some Jains, whose temple was close by. The Jains complained to the Magistrate that the accused had made the air offensive, and caused annoyance. The Magistrate found that the meat was not in an offensive state, but convicted the accused of committing a public nuisance, under s. 268 of the Penal Code, on the ground that he had done an act by which several persons, being Jains, were much annoyed, it being a well-known fact that they had great repugnance to the killing of animals of every sort. Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that in this case no real damage or injury was caused to the public or to the people in general dwelling in the vicinity, and that it was a case of private rather than of public nuisance, and therefore not one falling within the purview of the criminal law. The applicant's act was an annoyance merely by reason of its hurting the feelings of the Jains who have a repugnance to the killing of animals, and did not constitute an offence under s. 291 of the Penal Code. Muttumira v. Queen-Empress, I. L. R., 7 Mad., 590, referred to. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BYRAMJI EDALJI

VIRAPPA CHETTI* . I. L. R., 20 Mad., 433

126. ——— Obstruction on tidal navigable river—Penal Code, ss. 268, 283, 290.—Persons placing a bamboo stockade across a tidal navigable river for the purpose of fishing, although leaving in such stockade a narrow opening for the passage of boats, which passage was, however, kept closed except on the actual passage of a boat, were charged at the instance of a subdivisional officer with causing an obstruction under s. 283 of the Penal Code. Held that, although it was doubtful whether s. 283 applied to the case, they had committed an offence under s. 268 of the Penal Code, and were punishable under s. 290 of that Code. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF UMESH CHANDRA KAR . . . I. L. R., 14 Calc., 656

127. ——— Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 268, 283-290.—The mere fact of an encroachment on a tidal navigable river does not necessarily amount to a public nuisance so as to render a person causing such encroachment liable to punishment under s. 290 of the Penal Code, but there must be evidence that such encroachment causes one of the results specified in s. 268. In the matter of the petition of Umesh Chandra Kar, I. L. R., 14 Calc., 656, considered and commented on. The rule laid down in that case to the effect that any encroachment, however slight, on a tidal navigable river constitutes an offence under s. 290, is too widely stated. Each case should be determined on its own merits, and a decision arrived at as to whether the encroachment has caused an obstruction or not. The petitioner was charged with having erected a jag in a tidal navigable river, constructed of trees and dams, and thereby having committed offences under ss. 283 and 290 of the Penal Code. There was evidence to show that the jag was about 45 cubits long and 20 cubits broad, and that it was erected on the silted side of the river where it was about 800 hats broad, and that it did not obstruct the ordinary navigation of the river. The lower Court held that the jag could not but cause an obstruction, and convicted the petitioner under s. 283. Held that, as there was no evidence to show that the petitioner had caused any danger, obstruction, or injury to any person in any public way or line of navigation, the conviction under that section could not be sustained. Held further that he could not be convicted under s. 290, as there was no evidence of any obstruction to the ordinary navigation of the river. JUGAL DAS DALAL v. QUEEN-EMPRESS

128. ——— Slaughter of kine by Mahomedans on their own property—Penal Code, ss. 268, 290.—A person wilfully slaughtering cattle in a public street, so that the slaughter could be heard and seen by the passers-by, would commit an offence punishable under s. 290 of the Penal Code. But where certain Mahomedans, for a religious purpose, killed two cows before sunrise in a private compound partly visible from a public road, and the killing of one of the cows only was witnessed by one Hindu, —Held that the circumstances proved did not amount to the commission of a public nuisance as defined in s. 268 of the Code. Muttumira v. Queen-Empress, I. L. R., 7 Mad., 590, referred to. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ZAKIUDDIN

129. ——— Disobedience to an order duly promulgated by a public servant—Penal Code (1860), ss. 188 and 290—Cremation—Criminal Procedure Code, s. 143—Illegal order.—On the 11th August 1894 the District Magistrate promulgated an order prohibiting the people of the village of Thirukodikaval from using their burning grounds situated on the southern bank of the Cauvery, and directing them to use other burning grounds which had been provided. On the 11th May 1895 certain persons, in defiance of this order, cremated a corpse at the spot interdicted, and were convicted under ss. 188 and 290 of the Penal Code, but the conviction under s. 188 was reversed on appeal. Held that, when persons entitled to use a particular spot dedicated for the communal purpose of cremation use it for that purpose in a manner neither unusual nor calculated to aggravate the inconveniences necessarily incidental to such an act as is generally performed in this country, they cannot be convicted of a public nuisance on the ground that their act caused material annoyance and discomfort to persons near the place on the occasion referred to. Held further that the order of the District Magistrate was not warranted by s. 143, Criminal Procedure Code, or by any other law, and must therefore be set aside. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. Omission to take evidence on oath or affirmation.
—S. 6 of the Oaths Act (X of 1873) imperatively requires that no person shall testify as a witness except on oath or affirmation; and notwithstanding s. 13 of the same Act, the evidence of a child of eight or nine years of age is inadmissible if it has been ad-visedly recorded without any oath or affirmation.

2. ————— Omission to take evidence on oath or affirmation—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 118—Competency of persons of tender years.—The competency of a person to testify as a witness is a condition precedent to the administration to him of an oath or affirmation, and is a question distinct from that of his credibility when he has been sworn or has affirmed. In determining the question of competency, the Court, under s. 118 of the Evidence Act, has not to enter into inquiries as to the witness's religious belief, or as to his knowledge of the consequences of falsehood in this world or the next.
It has to ascertain, in the best way it can, whether, from the extent of his intellectual capacity and understanding, he is able to give a rational account of what he has seen or heard or done on a particular occasion. If a person of tender years or of very advanced age can satisfy these requirements, his competency as a witness is established. Having regard to the language of the Oaths Act (X of 1873), a Court has no option, when once it has elected to take the statements of a person as evidence, but to administer to such person either an oath or affirmation as the case may require. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. MARU, I. L. R., 10 All., 207, referred to. In a trial for murder before the Court of Session, one of the witnesses was a boy of twelve years of age, and, in answer to questions put by the Sessions Judge, he said that he worshipped Debi and understood the difference between truth and falsehood; that he did not know what would be the consequences here and hereafter of telling lies, but that he would tell the truth. The Sessions Judge proceeded to record the boy's statement, but without administering to him any oath or affirmation.
Held that there was nothing in law to sanction this procedure on the part of the Judge. The High Court required the attendance of the boy and of the accused, and, having satisfied itself of the competency of the former to depose as a

1. — s. 8—Oath purporting to affect a third person—Revocation of consent to be bound by statement made on oath taken in a particular form.—The plaintiff in a civil suit offered to be bound by the statement which the defendant might make on oath holding the arm of his son. The defendant accepted the proposal, took the required oath, and made a statement which had the effect of defeating the plaintiff's claim. When the defendant came into Court to take the oath, the plaintiff attempted to revoke his proposal, but alleged no further reason than that he did not understand what he had intended, and did not think the defendant would speak the truth. Held that the form of oath above indicated ought not, having regard to s. 8 of Act X of 1873, to have been administered; but as it had been administered, and was a form of oath especially binding upon Hindus, the statement made upon it should be accepted. Held also that, when one party to a suit offers to be bound by the oath of the other party, and such other party accepts the proposal, the party so offering to be bound should not be allowed to revoke his proposal except upon the strongest possible grounds proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be genuine grounds for revoking the proposal. *Lekh Raj Singh v. 2. — and ss. 9, 10, 11—Applicability to criminal proceedings—"Party to a judicial proceeding" does not include complainant or accused.—The provisions of ss. 8-11 of the Oaths Act (X of 1873) do not apply to criminal proceedings. The expression "party to a judicial proceeding" in s. 8 of the Act does not include either the complainant or the accused in a criminal case. In the course of a trial on a charge of assault the complainant's pleader agreed to be bound by the evidence on oath of a material witness, provided he swore on the Gita (a sacred book of the Hindus). The witness took the required oath, and stated that there was no assault, but merely a taking held of the hand. The Magistrate did not believe this witness, and proceeded with the trial. He convicted the accused on the other evidence in the case, and sentenced him to a fine of Rs. 25. Held that the Magistrate was not bound to decide the case on the evidence of the witness who swore the special oath. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. this suit." He subsequently desired to withdraw the petition on insufficient grounds, but the plaintiff took the oath, and on the strength thereof all the issues were decided, and a decree passed, in plaintiff's favour. The suit was, however, remanded, on appeal, for disposal after recording evidence on both sides. On appeal by plaintiff against this order of remand,—Held (1) that there is nothing in ss. 9 to 11 of the Indian Oaths Act, 1873, which allows a party who has agreed to the administration of an oath under those sections to retract after the opponent has accepted the proposal; (2) that the Act gives the Court a discretion to administer the oath or not, and though it should not administer it if good grounds be shown for retracting, it is justified in so doing, notwithstanding the retraction if the grounds are frivolous; (3) that if "the matter stated," as referred to in s. 11 of the Act, affords sufficient material for the decision of the suit, a decree may be passed on the facts so proved. But if the facts so proved are not sufficient for the decision of the case, such further facts as are necessary should be proved by evidence adduced on both sides. The Act provides, not for the adjustment of a suit in an arbitrary way, but merely for the conclusive proof of facts; such facts, if not sufficient for the decision of the suit, should be supplemented by facts duly proved by evidence; and (4) that the facts proved by the special oath are conclusively proved, and any further evidence that may be taken should be limited to matters not proved by the oath. *THOYI AMMAL v. 2. ———— Agreement to be bound by oath of a particular person—Discretion of Court.—The Oaths Act (X of 1873) does not constrain a Court to pass a decision in favour of a particular party. If a party to a suit says he will be bound by the oath of a particular person, s. 11 of the Act only means that pro tanto he will be bound, i.e., so far as the matter of that evidence is concerned, and that evidence will be conclusive as to its truth as against him throughout the whole of the litigation. But it in no way compels the Court trying the case to accept it as conclusive. VASUDEVYA SHANBOG v. NARAINA PAI, I. L. R., 2 Mad., 356, approved. MUHAMMAD ZAMUR v. CHERDA LAI [I. L. 1. ———— s. 12.—Refusal to take the oath—Presumption.—Where the Lower Appellate Court, at the instance of the defendant, called upon the plaintiff to swear on the Koran that the defendant's case was false, which the plaintiff refused to do,—Held that the lower Appellate Court was justified in raising a presumption, from the plaintiff's refusal, that his case was false, the Court having power to act as it did under the provisions of Act X of 1873. ISSEN MEAR v. KALARAM CHUNDER NAW [2 C. L. R., 476

2. ———— Refusal to take an oath—Effect of such refusal—Estoppel—Evidence.—The plaintiff sued to recover certain land from eight defendants, alleging it to be his exclusive property. One of the defendants pleaded that he was a co-owner with the plaintiff, who had hitherto paid him his share of the rent. In the course of the case he offered to withdraw his opposition to the plaintiff's claim if the plaintiff would swear a binding oath that his (the defendant's) allegations were false, and that the plaintiff had held exclusive possession of the property. The plaintiff refused to take the proposed oath. The Court, however, attached no importance to the refusal, and on the evidence passed a decree for the plaintiff. The defendant appealed, and in the Appellate Court the plaintiff's son, on behalf of his father, refused the oath, while on the other hand the defendant said he was willing, if required, to swear to the truth of his case. The Judge was of opinion that the plaintiff's refusal to take the proposed oath and the defendant's readiness to take it was, under the circumstances of the case, conclusive, and, disregarding the recorded evidence, he reversed the decree of the lower Court, and allowed the defendant's claim. Held (reversing the appellate decree and restoring the decree of the lower Court) that the Appellate Court was wrong in deciding the case on the ground of the plaintiff's refusal to take the proposed oath. That refusal did not conclusively prove the falsity of the plaintiff's claim. It was merely a piece of conduct which was evidence to be considered in the case together with the other evidence. In this case there was abundant other evidence, all of which was in favour of the plaintiff, and his refusal to take the oath did not necessarily constitute a sufficient reason to set aside that evidence. A party who makes an oath as prescribed by his adversary confers by so doing on his statement the character of conclusive proof, but his mere refusal to make the oath does not, under the terms of the Oaths Act (X of 1873), justify any legal presumption against him. Such refusal is to be considered merely as a piece of conduct to be considered along with the other evidence. CHINTAMAN BHAT v. SHRINIVAS BHAT [I. L. R., 22 Bom., 680

The prisoner's counsel objected to the admissibility of her statements, but the objection was overruled, and the prisoner was convicted of murder and sentenced to death. Held per JARDINE, J., that the girl's evidence was admissible. The "omission" referred to in s. 13 of the Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873) includes any kind of omission, and is not restricted to accidental or negligent omissions. QUEEN v. SEWA BHOGTA, 14 B. L. 6. ——— and s. 6—Examination as witness of a child of tender years—Intentional omission to administer affirmation.—A child, aged about six years, was called as a witness in a Sessions Court. The Judge satisfied himself of his intellectual capacity to give evidence, but intentionally omitted to administer an affirmation on the ground that he was of too tender years to render any attempt to bind his conscience expedient or practically operative. The Judge did not examine the child for the purpose of eliciting whether he knew it was wrong not to tell the truth, or whether he knew the difference between right and wrong, but he told him to tell the truth and permitted him to be examined as a witness. Held that the child should have been affirmed. Quære—Whether the omission to affirm the child having been intentional on the part of the Judge, the case came within the provisions of Oaths Act, s. 13. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. OBSCENE PUBLICATION.

1. ———— "Obscene," Meaning of the word—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 292 and 293.—In interpreting the word "obscene" in ss. 292 and 293 of the Penal Code, the Courts may rightly follow. Reg. v. Hicklin, L. R., 3 Q. B., 360, where Lord Cockburn, C.J., says: "I think the test of obscenity is this, whether the tendency of the matter charged as obscene is to deprive and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences, and into whose hands a publication of this sort may fall." Whether a publication is obscene, is a question of fact. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. PARASHRAM YESHWANT

2. ———— Destruction of book by order of Criminal Court—Penal Code, s. 293—Act X of 1872 (Criminal Procedure Code), s. 418.—A book may be obscene, within the meaning of the Penal Code, although it contains but a single obscene passage. The defence to a charge of selling and distributing certain obscene books was that they were sold and distributed in good faith in prosecution of a religious controversy. Held that the excessive obscenity of such books took away the protection which their controversial nature might otherwise have afforded them. Also that the intention of the seller and distributor must be gathered from the character of the matter contained in such books. As he had chosen to sell and distribute what was obscene, it must be presumed that he intended the natural consequences of his act, namely, corruption of the minds and prejudice of the morals of the public. It was not sufficient for him to say that his intentions were good. It was his public act that must be the test of his intentions; and having done an unlawful act, it was no answer to say that he thought it lawful. Queen v. Hicklin, L. R., 3 Q. B., 360, and Steele v. Brannan, L. R., 7 C. P., 261, followed. At the conclusion of the trial of a person for the sale and distribution of obscene books, the Court trying him ordered the destruction of certain copies of such books, voluntarily surrendered by him, under s. 418 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Held that such Court was

1. ————— Murder—Beng. Reg. IV of 1797—Act XVII of 1862—General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1868), s. 6—Repeal of statute, Effect of—Right of defence to High Court.—Up to the 1st January 1862, a person committing the offence of murder was liable to trial and punishment under the Regulations. By Act XVII of 1862 the Regulations prescribing punishments for offences were repealed "except as to any offence committed before the 1st January 1862." By the same Act it was declared that no person who should claim the same should be deprived of any right of appeal or reference which he would have enjoyed under such Regulations. By s. 6 of Act I of 1868, the repeal of an Act does not affect anything done, or any offence committed, or any fine or penalty incurred before the repealing Act shall have come into operation. Under the provisions of this section, the repeal of Act XVII of 1862 by Act VIII of 1868 and Act X of 1872 did not, in respect of offences committed before the 1st January 1862, affect the penalties prescribed by such Regulations, nor were any of the Regulations prescribing punishments for offences, which were in force before the passing of Act XVII of 1862, repealed in respect of offences committed before the 1st January 1862, prior to the passing of Act I of 1868. Held accordingly, where a person committed murder in the year 1855, that such person was punishable under the Regulations. Held also that, inasmuch as such right as the right of reference given by s. 8 of Regulation IV of 1797 accrues on conviction, and therefore in the present case had not accrued before Act XVII of 1862 was repealed, it is doubtful whether a person convicted of murder committed before the 1st January 1862 has such right. *EMPERESS OF INDIA v. 2. ————— Beng. Reg. IV of 1797—Act XVII of 1862—General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1868), s. 6—Repeal of statute, Effect of.—The prisoner was found guilty and sentenced under Regulation IV of 1797 to transportation for life, for a murder committed in 1861, before the Penal Code came into operation, and the case was sent up to the High Court to confirm the sentence. Regulation IV of 1797 was repealed by Act XVII of 1862, and that Act was wholly repealed by Acts VIII of 1868 and X of 1872. Held, on reference to a Full Bench, that the conviction was illegal, s. 6 of Act I of 1868, which provides that the repeal of any Act or Regulation shall not affect any offence committed before the repealing Act shall have come into operation, not being applicable. *EMPERESS v. 3. ————— Perjury or forgery—Act I of 1848—Sanction in case of perjury or forgery.—A case of perjury or forgery alleged to have been committed in a case before a Civil Court before January 1st, 1862, can be dealt with only under the old Procedure Law (Act I of 1848), according to which the sanction of the Court before which the offence was alleged to have been committed was necessary before criminal proceedings can be instituted. IN RE RADHAJEEBUN MOOSTAFEE

OFFENCE ON THE HIGH SEAS

—Act XIII of 1855.—In prosecuting a British subject for an offence committed on board a British ship upon the high seas,—Held (1) (dubitante PHAR, J.) that he must be charged with an offence under English law; (2) that the punishment must be according to English law; (3) that the trial must be according to the procedure of the local Court. Therefore, where a British subject was charged before the High Court with having committed an offence under 7 Will IV., and 1 Vict., c. 85, s. 2, on board a British ship, upon the high seas, within the admiralty jurisdiction of the Court, and found guilty of an offence under 14 & 15 Vict., c. 19, s. 5,—Held that the conviction was good, and that the prisoner would be rightly punished with rigorous imprisonment, which is defined by s. 53 of the Penal Code to be equivalent to imprisonment with hard labour, and that the trial had been rightly proceeded with under Act XIII of 1855. QUEEN v. THOMPSON . . . 1 B. L. R., O. Cr., 1

2. ————— Law applicable—Stat. 30 & 31 Vict., c. 124, s. 11—Procedure Power of Legislature.—The substantive law applicable to a British-born subject tried in the High Court of Judicature at Bombay for destroying a British ship on the high seas, at a distance of more than three miles from the shores of British India, is the English law, and not the Penal Code, notwithstanding the provisions of Stat. 30 & 31 Vict., c. 124, s. 11. The same substantive law is applicable to prisoners who conspire together in Bombay to destroy such ship on the high seas, and such ship is so destroyed in consequence. The procedure applicable in such cases is the ordinary criminal procedure of the High Court. The question whether the Indian Legislature has power to legislate with reference to offences committed on the high seas considered. There is not any Act of the Indian Legislature now in force which provides for the offence of destroying a ship, when committed at a greater distance than three miles from the coast, or for the abetment in British India of such an offence so committed. REG. v. ELMSTONE . . . 7 Bom., Cr., 89

3. ————— Jurisdiction of Criminal Courts—Power to legislate for high seas—Stats. 12 & 13 Vict., c. 96, and 23 & 24 Vict., c. 88.—An offence committed on the high seas, but within three miles from the coast of British India, as being committed within the territorial limits of British India, is punishable under the provisions of the Penal Code. The ordinary Criminal Courts of the country have jurisdiction over such offences by virtue of the Stat. 12 & 13 Vict., c. 96, ss. 2 and 3, extended to India by Stat. 23 & 24 Vict., c. 88. Semble—The Governor General of India in Council has no power to legislate for offences committed on the high seas outside the territorial limits of British India, though he has power to legislate in respect of offences committed on the high seas within three miles of its coasts. Meaning and effect of Stat. 12 & 13 Vict., c. 69, ss. 2 and 3, considered. Queen v. Thompson, 1 B. L. R., O. Cr., 1, commented on. REG. v. KASTYA RAMA . . . 8 Bom., Cr., 63

4. ————— Jurisdiction of Criminal Court—Law applicable to offence committed within three miles of Goa—Treaty Act (IV of 1880)—Stat. 30 & 31 Vict., c. 124, s. 11—Stat. 37 & 38 Vict., c. 27—Procedure.—The rule laid down in Reg. v. Elmstone, 7 Bom., Cr., 89, to the effect that English and not Indian law is applicable to offences committed on the high seas, is altered by Stat. 37 & 38 Vict., c. 27, which provides that such offences shall be tried and punished according to the local law. The accused, who was captain of a native craft, was charged with having dishonestly sold his cargo and scuttled his ship in the course of a voyage from Alleppy to Bombay. The accused was arrested in the Ratnagiri District, and committed for trial to the Sessions Judge of Ratnagiri, who convicted him under ss. 407 and 437 of the Penal Code and sentenced him to five years' rigorous imprisonment. On appeal, the accused contended that the Sessions Judge of Ratnagiri had no jurisdiction to try the case: 1st, because the first offence, if it took place at all, was committed within the territorial waters of Goa; and, 2ndly, because the offence, if committed on the high seas, could only be tried according to the law of England and not according to the Penal Code. Held (1) that the Court at Ratnagiri had jurisdiction. If the offence were committed within three miles of Goa, the Treaty Act (IV of 1880) between England and Portugal as regards the Goa territory conferred the right to try such cases in British India. (2) If the offence were committed beyond the three-mile limit and on the high seas, the Court had jurisdiction, and the Penal Code applied under the provisions of Stat. 30 & 31 Vict., c. 124, s. 11, and Stat. 37 & 38 Vict., c. 27. *QUEEN-EMPERESS v. 2. ——— Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 2, and s. 424—Notice of suit.—The Official Trustee is a "public officer" within the definition given in s. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. The cases in which a public officer is entitled to notice of suit under s. 424 of the Code are those in which he is sued for damages for some wrong inadvertently committed by him in the discharge of his official duties, and the object of giving notice is that, if a public body or officer entrusted with powers happens to commit an inadvertence, irregularity, or wrong, before any one has a right to require payment in respect of that wrong, he shall have an opportunity of setting himself right, making amends, restoring what he has taken, or paying for the damages he has done. The Official Trustee, therefore, is not entitled to notice of suit, when the question to be decided relates to the rights of the cestuis que trustent in respect of the trust-fund, and not to a wrong committed by him. *SHARUNSHAH BEGUM v. OFFICIAL TRUSTEE—concluded.

4' ——— Official Trustees Act (XVII of 1864), ss. 10, 15, and 17 — Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act (XXVII of 1866), s. 84—Indian Trustee Act (XXVII of 1866), ss. 6 and 26. —“Property,” Meaning of —“Vesting,” Meaning of. — The main purpose of the Official Trustees Act was to place the Official Trustee and his successors in office in the same position and vested with the same powers as the persons who held the property in trust previous to the appointment of the Official Trustee, and a wide meaning must be given to the words “property” and “vest.” That “property” in the Official Trustees Act was meant also to include action or actionable claims, and the vesting thereof was intended to have the effect of giving the Official Trustee complete power of enforcing all claims or demands in respect of the trust estate. The plaintiff, as a creditor of S E E, had obtained letters of administration to his estate and now brought this suit for the recovery of Rs 12,000 on a mortgage which had been executed in favour of S E E. S E E in his lifetime was the trustee of a sum of Rs 70,000, and the Official Trustee, who had been appointed trustee in his place and who was made a defendant in this suit, claimed the benefit under the said mortgage on the allegation that the said sum had been advanced by S E E out of the trust funds. The plaintiff contended that she was entitled to the usual mortgage decree and to get in the money thereunder, and that the proper course for the rival claimants to the money represented by the plaintiff in her personal capacity on the one side and the Official Trustee on the other was then to proceed to establish their rights to the money by separate suit or otherwise. Held that the contention of the plaintiff was not correct, and the Court was bound to determine the question raised by the plaintiff representing the estate of the deceased and the Official Trustee representing the trust estate, and that the Official Trustee could adduce evidence in this suit to show that the money was advanced out of the trust estate. GABRIEL v. SOLOMON & C. W. N., 70

1. ACCOUNT.

1. ———— Balance of account—Suit for sum due on balance of account.—Where a plaintiff sues for a specific sum of money due on a balance of account, it is for him to start his case and show what sum is due on the account; and until he has done so, the defendant need not be called upon to rebut him. BUTTUN CHAND BYSACK v. BOCHA BIBEN

[12 W. R., 529

2. ———— Suit founded on statement of account.—Where a claim was founded upon a distinct statement of an account signed by the defendant, in which he acknowledged a particular sum to be due to the plaintiff, Held that it was for defendant to produce evidence to rebut the prima facie case made against him. ELIAS v. JORAWAR MULL 24 W. R., 202

ONUS OF PROOF—continued.2. ACCOUNT BOOKS, ENTRIES IN.

3. ———— Suit for possession—Dispute as to whether transaction was a mortgage or sale—Entries in account books showing debts.—The plaintiffs sued for possession of certain lands, alleging that they had been mortgaged to the defendant by their father under two documents. The defendant produced them and relied upon them as deeds of sale which conveyed to him absolutely the lands mentioned in them. The form of the instruments was not conclusive, but it appeared aliunde by the conduct of the defendant himself that the deeds were intended as mere securities for money, and that he had treated them as such. Certain entries in the defendant's accounts also treated the respective considerations named in the deeds as continuing debts due to the defendant from the plaintiff's father. Held that the entries, when put in evidence, were sufficient to shift the burden of proof from the plaintiffs to the defendant, and that it was incumbent on the latter to give either oral or documentary evidence which in some way neutralised or explained away their effect, or showed that they related to other transactions than those mentioned in the two documents. GOVINDA v. JESHA PREMAJI . . . I. L. R., 7 Bom., 73

3. AGENT.

4. ———— Gomastah, Suit against—Suit to recover advances due from discharged gomastah.—In a suit to recover advances alleged to be due from a discharged gomastah, who pleaded acquittance at the time of his discharge, Held that plaintiff was bound to prove the payments to, and the receipts from, the gomastah, and to put in original documents, and not mere transcripts, even if the defendant had remained silent. WATSON & Co. v. SREEDHUR MUNDLE . . . 10 W. R., 421

5. ———— Agents of official assignee, Suit against—Proof of items of account.—Agents who have collected money on account of an insolvent estate are severally bound to prove to the assignee or his representative that the expenditure of the several amounts charged in their accounts has been actually and properly made and the onus probandi rests on such agents. It is incumbent on such agents to offer proof in support of all the items in their accounts which are impugned, and the propriety, or the actual expenditure of such items should form the subject-matter of issues properly framed. NUJUF ALI v. PATTERSON . . . 2 N. W., 104

6. ———— Principal, Suit against, for acts of agent—Authority of agent, Proof of.—In a suit against a principal as liable for the acts of an accredited agent of the latter, the onus lies on the plaintiff to prove that the alleged agent was the duly accredited agent of the defendants in reference to the transaction, the subject of the claim. HATHI RAM v. GORIND RAM . . . 3 Agra, 131

4. ARBITRATION.

7. ———— Reference to arbitration—Consent obtained by threats and undue influence.—

ONUS OF PROOF—continued.4. ARBITRATION—concluded.

When it is averred that the consent of one of the parties to an arbitration was obtained by threats and through undue influence exerted by persons in authority, the onus probandi is on the person making the averment. *PURVATHA VURDHAY NAUGHAR v. S. C. ZAMINDAR OF RAMNAD v. ZAMINDAR OF YETTIAPORAM . . . 7 Moore's I. A., 441

5. ATTACHMENT IN EXECUTION.

8. ———— Attachment of person of debtor—Execution of decree.—In an application for an order for execution of a decree by attachment of the person of the debtor, the onus is on the judgment-debtor to show that he has no means of satisfying the debt, and that he has not been guilty of any misconduct; and not on the creditor to show that, by sending the debtor to prison, some satisfaction of the debt would be obtained. STON v. BLOOM . . . 8 B. L. R., 255; 17 W. R., 165

9. ———— Claim by judgment-debtors to property seized in execution of a decree against them as representatives of original debtors—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 234.—Where, in execution of a decree against the representatives of a deceased debtor, specific property was seized as the property of the deceased debtor and as being in the possession of his representatives and the judgment-debtors claimed the property so seized as their own, Held that the burden of proof lay on the decree-holder who asserted that the property seized in execution of his decree was the property of the deceased debtor and as such in the possession of the judgment-debtors. ABDUL RAHMAN v. MAHOMED AZIM [4 C. W. N., 151]

6. BAILMENTS.

10. ———— Negligence—Hiring—Accident—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 106—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 150, 151, 150.—The question of the burden of proof in cases of accidental injury to goods bailed depends upon the particular circumstances of each case. In some cases, from the nature of the accident, [it lies upon the bailee to] account for its occurrence, and thus to show that it has not been caused by his negligence. In such cases it is for him to give a prima facie explanation in order to shift the burden of proof to the person who seeks to make him liable. If he gives an explanation which is uncontradicted by reasonable evidence of negligence, and is not prima facie improbable, the Court is bound in law to find in his favour, and the mere happening of the accident is not sufficient proof of negligence. S hired a horse from W, and while it was in his custody it died from rupture of the diaphragm, which was proved to have been caused by over-exertion on a full stomach. In a suit by W against S to recover the value of the horse, the defendant gave evidence to the effect that the horse became restive and plunged about, that he might then have touched it with his riding cane, that it shortly afterwards again became excited, bolted for two miles, and at last fell down and died. This evidence was not contradicted on any point, nor was any other evidence offered as to how the horse came to run away. There was evidence that the horse was a quiet one, that for some time previously it had done hardly any work, that it was fed immediately before it was let out for hire, and that rupture of the diaphragm was a likely result of the horse running away while its stomach was distended with food. The Court of first instance held that the defendant was bound to prove that he had taken such care of the horse as a man of ordinary prudence would under similar circumstances have taken of own property, that he must have used his whip freely, or done something else which caused the horse to bolt, and that in so doing he acted without reasonable care, and had thus caused the animal's death. The Court accordingly decreed the claim. Held by EDGE, C.J., that if the burden of proof was originally upon the defendant, it was shifted by the explanation which he gave, and which was neither contradicted nor prima facie improbable; and that the decree of the lower Court, being unsupported by any proof, and based on speculation and assumption, was one which that Court had no jurisdiction to pass, and should consequently be set aside in revision under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code. Per BRODHPURST, J., that as the decree was not only unsupported by proof, but opposed to the evidence on the record, the lower Court had "acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally," within the meaning of s. 622. SHIELDS v. WILKINSON. I. L. R., 9 All., 395

7. BOUNDARY.

11. — Disputed boundary—Removal of boundary.—Where a dispute arises regarding the direction of a boundary which one of the parties to a suit has demolished and the other party proves its general direction, the onus of proof that the direction is wrongly stated, if it be so, lies on the former, who removed the boundary. JUDONATH MULLICK v. KALLER KISTO TAGORE

[25 W. R., 524]

12. — Failure of proof.—Suit concerning the boundary line between contiguous mehals. The land in dispute (which, with the mehals adjacent, originally formed part of a permanently-settled zamindari, consisted of revenue-paying mehals, and of mehals alleged to be lakhiraj, all belonging to one proprietor) was so situated that it necessarily belonged either to Havelee, one of the latter, or to the contiguous rent-paying mehals. The Permanent Settlement did not define the boundary, nor was it fixed in subsequent resumption proceedings against Havelee, which ended in a temporary settlement of that mehal for twenty years. The ownership of Havelee having become severed from the ownership of the other mehals, the question of boundary arose, not as a question of revenue between the Government and a zamindar, but as one of title to land between the zamindars and proprietors of two contiguous and separate estates. The appellant having failed to prove that no part of the disputed land was included in the respondent's settlement (some portion at least being shown to belong to Havelee), and also having failed to prove by independent evidence his own right to recover the land specified in the plaint,—Held that the suit should not have been determined upon that mere failure on his part to support the burden of proof cast upon him, because the judgment would be as final and conclusive between the parties as an adjudication on the merits would be, and its effect would be to give something to the respondent which on the evidence belonged to the appellant's mehals. LEELANUND SINGH v. MOHESHUR SINGH where the Privy Council explain this case.

13. — Lakhiraj tenure and mal land of zamindar.—In a question of boundary between a lakhiraj tenure and a zamindar's mal land, there is no presumption in favour of one or the other, but the onus is on the plaintiff to prove his case. BEER CHUNDER JOBBRAJ v. RAM GUTTY DUTT

8 W. R., 209

14. — Failure to prove alleged boundary.—Where the plaintiff sued to recover a quantity of land by rectification of certain survey awards, which he averred demarcated erroneously the boundary between his zamindari and the zamindaris of the defendants, it was held, on a consideration of the evidence, that his suit was rightly dismissed because he failed to prove the position or existence of a stream which he stated was the true boundary between the zamindaris. LEELANUND SINGH v. MOHENDRO NARAIN SINGH

[13 W. R., P. C., 7: 13 Moore's I. A., 57]

15. — Suit for possession where defendant alleges land to be within zamindari, but in protected tenure.—In a suit by a talukhdar to obtain khas possession of certain land as being an encroachment by the defendants, who admittedly held land within a howla appertaining to the talukh, the defendants alleged that the land in dispute was situate within a nim-howla which they held within the howla. Held that the onus was on the plaintiff to show that the land was not within the howla, and that he was entitled to khas possession. RHIDOO KRISTO MISTRI v. NOBIN CHUNDER SEN

16. — Suit for khas possession—Onus of proving intermediate tenure—Onus of proving that a parcel is outside intermediate tenure—General rule as to onus of proof in suits for ejectment.—In a suit by a landlord for khas possession of land in defendants' possession, the defendants set up and proved an intermediate tenure. Held that it was on the plaintiffs to show that the parcel of land sought to be resumed was outside such tenure. Sahib Perhiad Sein v. Budhoo Sing, 12 Moore's I. A., 275, explained. Rhidoi Kristo Mistri v. Nobin Chunder Sen, 12 C. L. R., 457, followed. In this respect it makes no difference whether the plaintiff admits the existence of the under-tenure or the defendant proves such tenure to exist, although denied by the plaintiff. Mohima Chunder Mazumdar v. Moresh Chunder Neogi, I. L. R., 16 Calc., 473; Forbes v. Mahomed Hossein, 12 B. L. R., 210; Hurryhur Monkhopadhyay v. Madab Chunder Baboo, 14 Moore's I. A., 152, referred to and discussed. RAJENDRO KUMAR BOSE v. MORIM CHANDRA GHOSH . . . 3 C. W. N., 763

17. ———— Lands in zamindari—Settlement of shikmi talukh.—Lands situate within a zamindari must prima facie be considered as part of the zamindari; and it is for those who insist on the separation of lands from the general lands of the zamindari and on their settlement as a shikmi talukh to establish their title. WISE v. BHOOBUN MOYEE DEBTA

[3 W. R., P. C., 5: 10 Moore's I. A., 165

18. ———— Suit for confirmation of possession of lands alleged to be within certain talukh.—In a suit for confirmation of right and possession in respect of lands alleged to be within plaintiff's permanent, settled talukh, where plaintiff incidentally remarked that defendant (as intervenor in a previous rent suit) had claimed the lands as appertaining to another talukh which plaintiff alleged had no existence,—Held that it was an error of law in the lower Appellate Court to place on the defendant the onus of proving the existence of that other talukh, instead of following the usual and recognized course of requiring the plaintiff to prove that the lands in suit belonged to his talukh. GUNGAMALA CHOWDHRAIN v. MADHUB CHUNDER ROY 10 W. R., 413

19. ———— Mouzah which may belong to one of two zamindaris—Possession.—If a particular mouzah has been held for many years as part of a particular mehal of zamindari, the fact of such holding affords a strong presumption that it is part of that mehal, even as against a purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue of another mehal who claims that part of the mehal purchased by him. It is not conclusive evidence against such auction-purchaser, nor could any length of adverse holding prior to his purchase preclude the auction-purchaser from recovering it, if he could show clearly that it belonged to the mehal which he had purchased. GUNGA PRESHAD DUTT v. LOKENATH NUNDEE . . . 12 W. R., 179

22. ———— Suit by purchaser of share of co-sharer in land jointly settled.—Where the settlement proceedings showed that the question of extent of the shares of several persons on settlement was in dispute, and that the settlement was made jointly without prejudice to title, the onus, in a suit by a purchaser of one of the shares, was held to be on the plaintiff to show the extent of his vendor's share. 8. CLAIMS TO ATTACHED PROPERTY.

23. ———— Allegation of application by debtor during attachment.—Plaintiff alleging that an attachment subsisted, and that therefore the mortgage under which defendant claimed was invalid, is bound to prove his allegation, and the onus is not discharged by showing that the attachment was made some years previous to the alienation. 26. — Right to begin—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 246.—Where a claim was made under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, by a third party, to some timber, which had been attached by a prohibitory order under s. 234,—*Held per PEACOCK, C.J., L. S. JACKSON, PRAB, and MACPHERSON, J.J. (MITTER, J., dissenting), the claimant must begin. The onus is on him to prove that the goods attached were his property, or in his possession, and therefore not in the possession of the judgment-debtor. His evidence must be confined to proving his own claim, and he cannot be allowed to show a title in a third person with whom he has no connection. Held (per MITTER, J.) that, on the proper construction of the words "proceed to investigate the same with like powers as if the claimant had been originally made a defendant," the onus of proof as against the claimant is on the decree-holder. 27. — Suit by a claimant to property under attachment.—The defendant having attached certain property as belonging to his judgment-debtor B, the plaintiff applied for the removal of the attachment, alleging that she had purchased the property from B prior to the defendant's decree. Her application was rejected, and an order maintaining the attachment passed. The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit to establish her right to the property in question. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, who reversed the lower Court's decree, holding that it was incumbent on the defendant to show that the alleged transaction of sale was fictitious. On second appeal by the defendant to the High Court,—Held that the District Judge was wrong in throwing the burden of proof on the defendant. The defendant had obtained an order maintaining his attachment, and it was incumbent on the plaintiff, who impugned that order by the present suit, to prove her case. For this purpose it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove the payment of the purchase-money, and that she had been in possession since the alleged sale. GOVIND ATMARAM v. SANTAI I. L. 28. — Objections to attachment—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 278, 279, and 283—Suit on title under deed of sale to declare property not liable to be taken in execution.—In proceedings under s. 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure the objector pleaded that the property sought to be attached was his by virtue of a certain registered sale-deed. This objection was disallowed on the finding that the deed relied upon was fictitious. The objector then brought a separate suit to have the property declared not liable to be taken in execution; but he did not file the sale-deed in question or account for its non-production. Held that under the circumstances of the case it was in this instance for the plaintiff to prove that the deed he relied on

30. — Suit to establish right after rejection of claim—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 246.—In a suit brought to establish the plaintiff's right to certain property after an order against him under s. 246, Act VIII of 1859, the defendant admitted that the property had been in the possession of the person against whom the plaintiff had obtained his decree, but stated that it had passed to him by conveyance executed by that judgment-debtor in his favour; the plaintiff alleged that this deed of sale was fraudulent and void. Held the onus was on the plaintiff to show that the deed was not bona fide, and not on the defendant to prove the actual execution of the deed. LALA RUDRA PRASAD v. BINODE RAM SEN 3 B. L. R., A. C., 71 note; 10 W. R., 321

31. — Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 246—Claim.—The plaintiff sued to establish his right to a decree, of which he stated he was the assignee, and which he alleged the defendant had seized and sought to sell as the property of the plaintiff's assignee. The defendant admitted the assignment, but alleged that it was a fraudulent transaction. Held the onus was on him to prove that the transaction was not a bona fide one. *LALBHARI DUTT v. 32. — Suit to establish right to attach—Civil Procedure Code, s. 283—Right of defendant to set up title of third person.—In a suit brought under s. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to establish the right to attach property, it is for the plaintiff to prove that the property in question is the property of the judgment-debtor. The onus of proof is upon him. He can have no right to attach property which is proved either never to have belonged to his judgment-debtor, or having been his, to have passed out of his possession and ownership, and become, in law, the property of others prior to the time at which attachment is sought. 83. ——— Suit for declaration of title—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 246—Equitable right.—Certain property belonging to one S was mortgaged by him in 1810 and 1813 to O, under form of conditional sale. S had three sons, H, A, and N, and in 1819 he sold the property included in the mortgages of 1810 and 1813 to his sons, H and J. A. In 1820 H and A entered into a fresh arrangement with O, who accepted from them a fresh mortgage of the property in lieu of those of 1810 and 1813, and of this mortgage in 1831 he obtained a decree for foreclosure. Subsequently, the Government resumed the property and settled it with O's widow as representing the proprietor, and the plaintiff afterwards purchased a one-third share of the estate. The defendant was the holder of a decree obtained in 1836 against the heirs of S on a money-debt of S, and in execution of that decree he, in 1866, caused the rights of N in the property to be attached and sold, and himself became the purchaser. On attachment, the plaintiff preferred a claim to it under s. 246, Act VIII of 1859, but it was disallowed. In a suit by the plaintiff praying for his right of ownership and possession, which was menaced by the defendant's decree and sale,—Held the onus was on the defendant to show that he had an equitable right which he could assert against the plaintiff. 87. ——— Suit for value of goods taken in execution where a claim to them is allowed under s. 246, Act VIII of 1859—Evidence of title.—M, to whom C, his judgment-debtor, had made over certain goods, attached the same in execution of his decree as the property of his judgment-debtor, but, on a claim being preferred to the goods by D and B under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, they were ordered to be released from attachment; they remained, however, in the possession of M. D and B having sued M to recover the value of the goods, the lower Court held that, inasmuch as M failed to sue within a year to set aside the order of the miscellaneous department, and to establish his right to take the property in satisfaction of his decree as belonging to his judgment-debtor, the plaintiff's right to it must be admitted without further enquiry or proof, and decreed the claim on the basis of that order alone. It was held in special appeal that the defendant was not debarred by that order or by the law of limitation from disputing the plaintiff's right to the goods, and that the plaintiffs were bound to prove their right to entitle themselves to a decree, and that the miscellaneous order was not conclusive proof of their right, and still less such an adjudication on the question as precluded a readjudication of it. 11. CUSTOM.

41. — Custom at variance with law of inheritance—Proof of custom—Khojas.—Where a defendant alleged a special custom of the Khoja community at variance with the Hindu law of inheritance, Held that the burden of proving the alleged custom rested upon her. RAHIMATBAI v. HIRBAI . . . I. L. R., 3 Bom., 34

42. — Impartibility—Suit for partition—Presumption as to impartibility.—In a suit for the partition of part of a deshat vatan, brought by the younger brothers of a joint Hindu family against their eldest brother the desai, the defence was that the vatan was held by him as an impartible inheritance, subject to a right, by custom, that a brother should receive maintenance out of the income derived from it. Held that there was no such general presumption in favour of the impartibility of estates of this kind as to shift the burden of proof, which was upon the desai, to show, that the vatan had, contrary to the general Hindu law, been inherited by him alone. It was for the desai to show, by evidence of the nature of the tenure of the vatan, that it was impartible or to show, by evidence of family custom or of district, i.e., local custom, that impartibility attached to it, such evidence being strong enough to rebut the presumption of the prevalence of the general Hindu law. ADRISHAPPA v. GURUSHIDAPPA [I. L. R., 4 Bom., 494]

43. — Adoption—Custom, Proof of.—It is a general rule and fundamental principle amongst Brahmans, Kshatriyas, and Vaishyas, that they are absolutely prohibited from, and incapable of, adopting a daughter's or sister's son or son of any other woman whom they could not marry by reason of propinquity. The burden of proving a special custom to the contrary amongst any members of these three regenerate classes, prevalent either in their caste or in a particular locality, lies upon him who avers the existence of that custom. GOPAL SAFRAY v. HANMANT SAFRAY . . . I. L. R., 3 Bom., 273

44. — Forfeiture of rights of mohuntship by marriage—Right of succession.—Where the plaintiff proved his right of succession to a math on the death of its mohunt, the burden of proving that his subsequent marriage worked a forfeiture of his office and its appendant property and rights, lay upon the defendant who impugned the plaintiff's right on account of the marriage. GOSAIN RAMBHARTI JAGRUPBHARTI v. 12. DAMAGES.

47. — Suit for damages against defaulting witness—Proof of liability.—In a suit for damages against a defaulting witness the onus is on the plaintiff to prove that he was damaged by the non-attendance of the witness. The mere failure of the defendant to appear as a witness is not per se a sufficient proof of his liability to damages. DWARKANATH KOORKE v. ANANDO CHUNDER SAMUEL . . . 5 W. R., S. C. C. 48. — Suit for damages for wrongful occupation—Refusal to give up possession.—A party holding a decree for a share of a mouzah brought a suit for possession and damages on the allegation that he found the defendant in occupation of a part of the land on which indigo plants were standing, and permitted him to continue for a time till the plants should be removed, defendant promising them to give over possession, but that, when the time came, defendant refused to give over possession and was still occupying the land. Held that it lay upon the plaintiff to show wrongful occupancy on the part of the defendant. GOUR SURUN DASS v. 57. ———— Relationship between parties as showing bona fides of transaction.—The relationship between parties to a conveyance of property may be immaterial if the purchase is found true, but is not immaterial where the question to be decided is whether the purchase was true or fraudulent. The mere handing over of the purchase-money from one party to the other in the presence of strangers, and the registration of the deed, are not sufficient to prove the transaction to be bona fide. *PRAN KISHEN DEB v. 76. ——— Voluntary deed—Suit by settlor to set aside his deed.—One M (the original plaintiff) was priest in the family of the first and second defendants, and was treated with much kindness by the first defendant (N), upon whom he chiefly relied for advice in worldly matters. A sum of Rs30,000, which was the bulk of his property, was in deposit in the defendants' firm at interest. Early in 1887 he became ill, and in June 1887 he expressed a wish to execute a trust-deed and an English will. He gave instructions to N for the trust-deed. By this deed, which contained no power of revocation, he settled Rs30,000 upon the first and second defendants (who were uncle and nephew), as trustees to perform his funeral ceremonies and to carry out certain religious observances and to pay two annuities, each of Rs25, and with the residue to found a Sanskrit class. The deed provided for the payment during his lifetime, of a sum of Rs100 per mensem for his maintenance and expenses, or such larger sum as he might require for such purposes, but in other respects it was not to come into operation until after his death. The will of even date gave certain property to his wife, and subject to this bequest gave the residue of his property to his sister. After receiving instructions for these documents, N took them to an attorney. From these instructions drafts were prepared, which were read over to M in his room by the attorney's managing clerk. Neither drafts, nor instructions, nor the documents themselves were, however, left with M. The drafts were then engrossed, M having made some trifling corrections in them. On the 23rd June 1887 he attended at the house of the attorney. The documents were explained to him by the attorney, and were interpreted to him by a High Court interpreter. M was then examined by a medical man with a view to ascertain whether he was capable of understanding what he was doing. M then executed the trust-deed and the will, and both were then duly attested. At the same time M signed the accounts in the defendants' books, and the balance of the money, which stood to his credit over and above the Rs30,000 comprised in the deed, was produced and made over to him, and he made it over to N to be kept by him personally. Shortly after this, M's sister and her son came to Bombay, and he fell under their influence. He became dissatisfied with what he had done with the Rs30,000, and on the 21st November 1887 he executed a will by which he purported to remove the deed and the will of the 23rd June, and he left the whole of his property to his sister. On the 2nd September 1888 his nephew took him to Surat, and on the 14th September 1888 at Surat he executed a deed revoking the trust-deed of the 23rd June 1887. He also signed instructions and a power-of-attorney under which this suit was filed. He died subsequently to the filing of the suit, and his sister and executrix became plaintiff. The plaintiff prayed that the deed of the 23rd June 1887 should be set aside on the ground of undue influence, etc., but the personal charges against the defendants were abandoned at the hearing. Held that the deed must be set aside on the ground that the circumstances of the case threw upon the defendants the burden of showing that M understood the effect of the settlement and its finality. This they had failed to do. The facts of the case brought it within the principles deducible from Anderson v. Elsworth, 3 Giff., 164; Forshaw v. Welsh, 30 Beav., 243; and Wollaston v. Tribe, L. The gift comprised the whole of the plaintiff's property, and the only reason for its execution was the plaintiff's desire to secure benefits to his soul in the next world, and his having heard the defendant recite the holy book called Bhagwat. Almost immediately after execution of the deed the plaintiff repudiated it, and sued for its cancellation on the ground of fraud. Held that, having regard to the fiduciary relation subsisting between the parties, the improvidence of the gift, the absurdity of the reason alleged for it, and the principle recognized by s. 111 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), the burden rested upon the defendant to show that the transaction was made without undue influence and in good faith; and, in the absence of such proof, the plaintiff was entitled to obtain cancellation of the deed. *Sital Prasad v. In after years the younger brother sued the elder for partition of the estate excepting so much of it as had already been the subject of the above gifts. The elder defended the suit on the ground that the deeds of gift had not been intended to operate, not representing any real transaction. 90. ——— Proof of consideration—Promissory note—Suit by professional money-lender against a young man recently come of age—Presumption—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 118—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114, ill. (c).—Professional money lenders sued a young man recently come of age to recover certain loans of money alleged to have been advanced by them to him on promissory notes. The defendant, who under the will of his father was entitled to a large property but had not yet come into possession of it, was of an extravagant and reckless character. He pleaded, as to part of the consideration for the notes, that he did not receive it, and as to a further part, that the consideration was immoral. In dealing with the case the Court laid down the following propositions, not as rules of law, but as guides in considering the evidence in such a case: (1) That upon the above facts the ordinary presumption that a negotiable instrument has been executed for value received was so much weakened that the defendant's allegation that he had not received full consideration was sufficient to shift the burden of proof and to throw upon the money lenders (the plaintiffs) the obligation of satisfying the Court that they had paid the consideration in full. That is the practical effect of ill. (c) to s. 114 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872). (2) Where the plaintiff, in answer to such a defence, affirmed that he had paid the consideration in full, and was corroborated by his books and witnesses, the onus of proof again shifted over upon the defendant. (3) The burden of proof thus thrown upon the defendant could only be met by a perfectly truthful and harmonious statement which the Court felt able to rely upon with confidence. In the absence of this, the ordinary presumption laid down in s. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) must prevail, viz., that until the contrary is proved, the presumption should be made that every negotiable instrument was made for consideration. *MOTI GULABOHAND v. 91. ——— Proof of consideration for a registered mortgage—Income-tax returns—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 76 and 77.—The defendant in a suit for money secured by registered mortgage to be paid by him to the plaintiff denied the consideration of which he had, before the registering officer, acknowledged the receipt. The original Court, which dismissed the suit, would not have decided in favour of the defendant but for its having been shown, on an inspection of copies, officially certified, of income-tax returns made by the plaintiff, that he had not stated the interest accruing on the mortgage as part of his income. This judgment was reversed in appeal. The Judicial Commissioner was of opinion that the certified copies should not have been admitted in evidence, in reference to ss. 76 and 77 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872); and also that, assuming the false statement of income to have been made, it still remained unproved by the defendant that the acknowledged consideration had not been paid. The judgment of the Appellate Court was affirmed by their Lordships, who concurred in the opinion that the returns, if the plaintiff had wrongly omitted to make a full return of income, would not have had any weight in changing the onus which lay upon the defendant of showing that no consideration had passed for this mortgage. *ALI KHAN BAHADUR v. 97. ——— Suit on bond—Onus thrown on wrong party, Effect of.—The defendants in a suit on a bond admitted the execution of the bond, but denied that they had received, as the bond recited they had at the time of its execution, the consideration for it. The Court of first instance, instead of calling on the defendants to establish the fact that they had not received the consideration for the bond as it ought to have done under the circumstances, irregularly allowed the plaintiff to produce witnesses to prove that the consideration for the bond had been paid at the time of its execution. The evidence of these witnesses proved that the consideration of the bond had not been paid at the time of execution, and that, if it had been paid at all, it had been paid at some subsequent time. Held that, although the plaintiff ought not to have begun, yet, as he had done so, and his witnesses had proved that the consideration for the bond had not been paid as admitted in the bond, a new case was opened up in which the onus was shifted back to the plaintiff to establish that he had, not at the time alleged in the bond, but at some subsequent time, paid to the defendants the consideration for the bond. MAKUD v. BAHORI LAL . . . I. L. R., 3 All., 824

98. ——— Non-receipt of full consideration—Suit on bond.—In a suit for money due on a bond between the representatives of the original parties to it, the defendant attempted to reduce the claim on the ground that the money had not been received in full, the bond having been given partly in respect of an old debt, and partly in respect of a credit, in account, upon which the debtor had not, in fact, drawn certain items. The Judicial Committee concurred with the High Court, which had reversed so much of the decree of the Court of first instance as disallowed these items; the latter Court not having correctly adjusted the burden of proof, and having acted as if the plaintiff had relied on his own books to prove the debt, besides having erred in weighing the evidence. RAJESWARI KUAR v. 99. ——— Judge's duty to decide secundum allegata et probata.—The plaintiffs sued upon two bonds executed by the defendant in their father's favour, one for ₹200 and the other for ₹99-15 annas. The defendant in his written statement, as well as in his deposition, admitted execution of the bonds in question, but pleaded non-receipt of consideration. The Subordinate Judge held that the bond for ₹200 was not proved, but awarded the claim upon the other bond. On appeal, one of the issues raised by the Assistant Judge was—are the bonds in suit proved? He held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove execution of the bonds, and dismissed the claim in toto. Held, reversing the decision of the lower Court, that the defendant having admitted execution of the bonds in question, the Assistant Judge acted illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction in raising the question of the execution. The first rule of adjudication is that a Judge shall decide secundum allegata et probata. The only question that could be tried in the present case was non-receipt of consideration. GOBAKH BABAJI v. VITHAL NARAYAN . . . I. L. R., 11 Bom., 435

execution of the bond, pleaded payment, and that the bond had been returned by the plaintiff to them. 102. ——— Bond in favour of one undivided brother for the benefit of himself and others—Suit by promise alone—Payment to younger undivided brother—Discharge.—In a suit on a bond executed by the deceased father of defendants, in favour of the plaintiff, the defendants, while admitting the bond and the consideration for which it had been given, contended that, inasmuch as plaintiff had four undivided brothers and the deed had been executed in his name for the benefit of himself and his brothers, the latter should have been joined as plaintiffs, and that plaintiff could not maintain the suit alone. They also pleaded payment to plaintiff's undivided younger brother, which payment, they contended, was binding on the plaintiff. Held that plaintiff was entitled to sue for the family debt without joining his undivided brothers, the contract on which the suit was based being in plaintiff's sole name and not purporting to have been obtained on behalf of any others but himself. And that, as to the payment pleaded, if true, plaintiff was, as regards the promisor, the only person prima facie entitled to payment; it therefore lay on the promisor to show that a payment to a third party was binding on the plaintiff, which had not been done. The contention that payment to any member of the family was by itself necessarily binding on the member who took the contract, could not be supported. ADAIKKALAM CHETTI v. MARIMUTHU . . . I. L. 103. ——— Bond in favour of one co-sharer—Payment of such bond made to another co-sharer when a discharge.—Where a debt due to one member of a joint family has been paid by the debtor to another member of the family, the question whether such payment operates as a discharge depends on the circumstances under which it was made. A and B were members of joint Hindu family. Both managed the joint property for the common benefit. Each used to recover debts due on bonds taken in the other's name. In 1890 defendant passed a bond to A. In 1892 he passed a mortgage bond to B, the consideration for which was stated to be the balance due on the former bond. Subsequently A sued defendant on the bond of 1890. Held that under the circumstances the mortgage bond passed to B operated as a valid discharge of A's claim under the previous bond. GURUSHAN TAPPA v. 106. — Suit for value of hundi—Proof of payment—Possession of hundi.—On 2nd August 1872 A K filed a plaint against M H and M R, in which he alleged that on 1st April 1870 M R had given a hundi for Rs. 500, for value received, to A K that on 27th March 1871 M H purchased this hundi from A K, promising to pay him Rs. 534 for it; that M H gave the hundi to his brother I H for the purpose of obtaining payment of the amount from M R; and that I H subsequently informed A K that the hundi had been lost. A K accordingly prayed that defendants M H and M R might be decreed to pay to him Rs. 534 with profit and interest. M R admitted that he had executed the hundi, and had given it to A K for Rs. 500. He further alleged that it had been presented to him for payment by I H, to whom he had paid the amount with interest on 31st March 1871, and he produced the hundi with a receipt, purporting to be by I H, indorsed upon it. I H denied the payment by M R, and alleged the indorsement on the hundi to be a forgery. Held that the admission by M R of the drawing of the hundi for value received laid on him the burden of proving payment, and that, though the possession by M R of the hundi was a circumstance in his favour, yet, as it did not in itself amount to proof of payment, the onus probandi was not thereby shifted on to the plaintiff. ABDUL KARIM v. 113. ——— Suit for ejectment—Limitation Act, 1859, s. 15.—The law obtaining in India requires that in actions of ejectment the Courts should always enforce the rule that a plaintiff must recover by the strength of his own title; and a party who might have shifted the burden of proof, if he had proceeded under s. 15 of Act XIV of 1859, cannot, if he let slip that opportunity, obtain the same advantage in an action of ejectment. *DADABHAI NARSIDAS v. 115. ——— Defence of right of permanent occupancy—Defence of special character.—In suits by the trustee of a temple to recover possession of certain lands with meane profits, defendants set up in defence that they were absolute owners of the land in question, or, at least, were entitled to rights of permanent occupancy. In support of the latter contention, they relied, inter alia, upon certain pymash documents, which contained the word ulavadai, the use of which term, they contended, established the alleged right of permanent occupancy. Held (1) that, where the occupier of land resists a suit for ejectment by setting up a claim of a right of permanent occupancy, the onus of establishing such a right lies on the defendant, inasmuch as by it he seeks to derogate from the ordinary incidents of property; and (2) that the right expressed by the term ulavadai (which means an act or right of ploughing or cultivating lands) cannot be assumed to be a permanent right. *RANGASAMI REDDI v. 125. ———— Nature of tenancy—Grounds of enhancement.—In a suit to recover rent at an enhanced rate after notice had been granted, a kabuliya was put in in support of the plaintiff's case and admitted by defendants. A pottah put in by defendants was found by the lower Court to be a forgery. Held that plaintiff's contention that the kabuliya does not give the full terms of the agreement binds him to show beyond all reasonable doubt what were the actual terms of the pottah. Having failed to do this, the kabuliya was treated as complete and conclusive evidence of the nature of the tenancy, which was inferred by the Court to be permanent and at a fixed rate. Held that it lay upon the plaintiff to make out distinctly the different grounds on which he rested his right to enhance, viz., excess of area, increase of productiveness apart from the tenant's agency, and increase in the value of produce. GOLAM ALI v. 151. ————— Adoption under will—Proof of validity of adoption.—A Hindu died leaving a son (who afterwards died a minor and unmarried), a widow, and three daughters. On the death of the minor, the widow succeeded to the property, and, under a will of her late husband, adopted in 1851 a son of her husband's brother. The widow died in 1866. One of the daughters, as guardian of her infant son born in 1858, brought a suit to set aside the will, and with it the adoption, and for recovery of possession of the property left by her minor brother. The defence set up was that the will was genuine; that the plaintiff should have sued within twelve years from the adoption; and that she had in 1851 admitted the adoption in having accepted a dar-patni from the guardian of the adopted son. Held that the onus was upon the adopted son to prove the validity of the adoption, and not upon the plaintiff suing as heir to prove its invalidity, even though he alleged fraud and adduced no evidence in support of it. TARINI CHARAN CHOWDHRY v. ONUS OF PROOF—*continued.*22. HINDU LAW—continued.

1878, leaving a widow B. The year before his death his only son (Bala), a child of eight years old, had left his home and was never heard of again. A few days before his death, S adopted the plaintiff (his nephew) and executed a deed of adoption, which stated that he had no hope that his son Bala was alive, and that he had therefore adopted the plaintiff. The deed further declared the plaintiff to be the owner of all S's property with all the rights of a natural son, but provided that, in the event of the lost son returning, he should have half. In 1892 the plaintiff, as S's adopted son, brought this suit to recover some of S's property, which was in the hands of the defendants, who claimed it as S's heirs. They (inter alia) impeached the plaintiff's adoption. Held that, in order to recover the property as the adopted son of S, it lay on the plaintiff to prove a valid adoption. It was a condition precedent to prove that at the date of the adoption S was without a son. It was therefore for the plaintiff to prove that Bala was then dead. There was at that time no presumption that Bala was dead, and, there being no evidence on the point, it was impossible to say when he died, or consequently that the adoption was valid. Held, however, that plaintiff was entitled to succeed as donee under the deed of adoption. It was clearly S's intention to give the estate to the plaintiff as being his adopted son. But if the adoption was invalid, the gift had no effect. The onus here was on the defendants. It was for them to show that Bala was at that date alive and the adoption therefore invalid. That burden they had not discharged, and the plaintiff therefore was entitled to a decree. Per FARRAN, C.J.—Where a deed of gift or will confers an estate upon a named person, because he fills or by reason of his filling a certain character, he is entitled to recover the estate without affirmatively proving that he fills such character. The onus of proving that he does not fill the character, which is the reason of the gift, lies upon those who dispute his claim. The whole question is one of onus of proof. RANGO BALAJI v. MUDIYEPPI [I. L. R., 23 Bom., 296]

153. — Suit to enforce the mortgage against son's shares—Joint Hindu family—Mortgage by father—Legal necessity—Burden of proof.—As a general rule, a creditor endeavouring to enforce his claim under a hypothecation-bond given by a Hindu father against the estate of a joint Hindu family in respect of money lent or advanced to the father having only a limited interest, should, if the question is raised, prove either that the money was obtained by the father for a legal necessity, or that he made such reasonable inquiries as would satisfy a prudent man that the loan was contracted to pay off an antecedent debt, or for the other legal necessities of the family. There is a distinction between such cases as this and cases in which a decree has been obtained against the father and the property sold, or cases in which the sons come into Court to ask for relief against a sale effected by their father for an antecedent debt. Where a decree was obtained against the father and a sale effected, the presumption is that the decree was properly made. Where a son comes into Court to ask for relief against a sale effected by his father for an antecedent debt, it is for the son to make out a case for the relief asked for. In a suit against the members of a joint Hindu family upon a bond given by their father and in which family property was hypothecated no evidence was given on either side as to the circumstances in which the bond was given. There was no evidence to show that any inquiry had been made by the plaintiff as to the objects for which the bond was executed by the father. Held that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to show either that the money was obtained for a legal necessity, or that he had made reasonable inquiries and obtained such information as would satisfy a prudent man that the loan was contracted to pay off an antecedent debt or for the other legal necessities of the family, and that, no evidence having been given, the suit must be dismissed. *JAMNA v. 159. ———— Voluntary transfer alleged to have been made by a Hindu widow—Burden of proving her knowledge of her rights—Gift.—Where a voluntary transfer by a Hindu widow is alleged, the burden of proving that it was a free gift, made with knowledge by her of her rights, is on the donee. The plaintiff, widow of the only son who survived his father, who was the owner of village lands and other property, had become, on her husband's death without issue, entitled, as the widow, to the estate which he had inherited. But she obtained possession of only half of it. The other half was in the recorded possession, when this suit was brought, of the widow of her late husband's younger brother, who died in his father's lifetime. The case which the latter widow, as defendant, now sought to make was that she had become entitled to a share in the estate as the result of a series of transactions, by way of family arrangement, in which the two widows, and their mother-in-law, widow of the deceased father, had taken part. These included a reference to arbitration, a release, and dakhil kharij in settlement records. Held that the plaintiff must succeed, in the absence of proof of which the burden was on the defendant, that the plaintiff, when ceding half of the estate to which she was entitled, had knowledge of her right, as widow, to the whole, and had freely made what in effect was a gift. *DEO KUAE v. 160. ———— Power of widow of sonless Hindu to mortgage ancestral property—Pardanashin woman, Conditions necessary to the execution of a valid deed by—Power of reversioner to sell or mortgage reversionary interest in—Expectancy—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 6, cl. (a).—K died in 1866 possessed of considerable property, both moveable and immoveable. He left surviving him a widow, H, who died in 1878, a daughter, A, married to one L, and two grandsons, I and S, sons of A, the latter of whom, S, died some time subsequent to 1881, as did also his father L. In December 1877, a mortgage-deed was executed over certain of the ancestral property of the family of K, the ostensible executants being L for himself, and H, A, and I through L as their general attorney. This deed was to secure a debt of Rs10,000 stated to be to some small extent for an advance in cash, and as to the balance in respect of certain previous debts and interest thereon. At the date of this bond both I and S were minors. In April 1881, H having in the meanwhile died, and I having attained majority, but S being still a minor, a second bond of a similar nature to the former was executed by L, A, and I for Rs20,000, this sum being recited as composed of various debts of earlier date with interest thereon, of an advance to pay Government revenue, an advance for expenses of the marriage of L's daughter, and a very small balance in cash. It was not shown that the debts secured by either of these two bonds were debts incurred for legal necessity by the widow or daughter of K, or that the mortgagees, after due inquiry, had reasonable grounds for believing that such necessity existed, nor was it shown that the mortgages were entered into with the consent of all the husband's kindred under circumstances which might raise a valid presumption that the debts secured by them were properly incurred. It was further not shown that the power-of-attorney under which L purported to act in executing the bond of 1877 on behalf of H, A, and I was ever properly explained to the professed executants or that they understood its import; nor was it shown that either of the bonds was duly explained to and comprehended by the professed executants other than L himself, in manner required by law in the case of documents executed by pardanashin women; nor, though at the date of the execution of the second bond I had attained the age of majority, did it appear that he signed the bond with any clear knowledge of its contents or of the liability which he was professing to incur thereby, or otherwise than through the influence brought to bear on him by his father L. Held, on suit by the mortgagees to bring to sale the ancestral property which had been of K in his lifetime in enforcement of the two mortgages abovementioned, that the mortgages were not binding on the alleged executants or on the ancestral property at the date of suit in the hands of A. I's interest in the family property in suit could only be affected by the mortgage of the 2nd of April 1881 on proof that the debt was in fact one, or was on reasonable inquiry by, and statements made to, the lenders of the money believed by them to be one, in respect of which his mother A, as a Hindu daughter in possession, could mortgage or charge the family property beyond her own then vested interest in it, or on proof that he, as one of the reversioners, by joining with his mother in executing the documents of mortgage, led the lenders of the money to believe that such a necessity existed for the loan as enabled the Hindu daughter to create a valid mortgage on the family property beyond the extent of her own life-interest. The Hindu law which prevails in the N.-W. Provinces recognizes no power in a reversioner to sell or mortgage his interest in expectancy, even although he may be the heir-apparent. It is absolutely necessary, before holding that a pardanashin lady or her property is liable on a contract alleged to have been made by her or in consequence of an alleged execution by her of a general power-of-attorney, to be reasonably satisfied that the liability she was incurring and the nature of the transaction were explained to her; and more particularly is this the case if it is sought by reason of her having executed a document, to fix her and her property with a liability to pay a debt, which, if the document had not been executed by her or by an agent appointed by her with adequate power, could not have been enforced against her property. It is also necessary when money-lenders in this country seek to enforce against the property of a Hindu family a contract of mortgage made by a reversioner, who, although of age at the time, was then still of tender years and without experience of business, for the Court, when the question is raised, to be satisfied that the reversioner understood the nature of the transaction and the effect of the contract which he was entering into, or that the reversioner of the family property, in which the reversioner had an estate in expectancy only, was liable for the debt in respect of which the mortgage is sought to be enforced, and that no unfair advantage was taken of the reversioner's youth and inexperience. ACHHAN KUAR v. Where a suit is brought against the father of an undivided Hindu family having an infant son, for the specific performance of a contract to sell land, presumably ancestral, the Court, having thereby notice that the vendor's powers can be exercised without a breach of trust only where there exists a necessity sufficient in law to justify the sale, and that the infant son is entitled to interdict the sale, is bound to require the plaintiff to give some proof of the necessity for the sale. GURUSAMI SASTRIAL v. 177. — Alienation by widow—Proof that money on mortgage was advanced for purpose justified by legal necessity—Evidence of sufficiency of husband's estate to maintain widow.—A Hindu proprietor's heirs, in possession after the death of his widow, who had mortgaged part of the inheritance, were sued by the mortgagee's heir, who represented him, to enforce the mortgage as binding on the land. There was evidence that, after the mortgage was executed, previous mortgages made by the widow were paid off with the borrowed money; but there was no evidence connecting any of those securities with a debt of the husband; or that the mortgage was made for a legitimate purpose. Held that, although the suit was brought by the representative, and not by the original mortgagee, the burden of proving the money to have been advanced to the widow for a purpose justified by legal necessity was on the plaintiff; and that it was incumbent on him to adduce sufficient evidence of the nature of the transaction. That general evidence to the effect that the husband died in debt, and that the widow substituted new securities at reduced interest for former mortgages, was not sufficient to exempt the plaintiff from having to prove the particulars of the transaction and its justification. That the burden of proving that the estate left by the husband was sufficient to maintain the widow was not thrown upon the defendants. Hunooman Pershad Pandey v. Mundraj Koonweree, 6 Moore's I. DEEN DYAL SINGH* 7 W. R., 275

179. — Alienation by manager of infant's estate—Presumption of bond fides—Obligation of purchaser to inquire—Necessity for charge.—Under the Hindu law, the right of a bond fide incumbrancer who has taken from a de facto manager a charge on lands created honestly, for the purpose of saving the estate, or for the benefit of the estate, is not (provided the circumstances would support the charge had it emanated from a de facto and de jure manager) affected by the want of union of the de facto with the de jure title. The question as to the onus of proof in such cases is one not capable of a general and inflexible answer, but the presumption proper to be made will vary with circumstances. Thus, a mortgagee, who is setting up a charge in his favour made by one whose title to alienate he knew to be limited, must prove the facts which embody the representations made to him of the alleged deeds of the estate and the motives influencing his immediate loan; but such proof must not be required from one not an original party, after a lapse of time and enjoyment and apparent acquiescence. Where, also, a charge is created by the substitution of a new security for an older one, and the consideration for the older one was an old precedent debt of an ancestor not previously questioned, the presumption will arise in favour of a consideration that binds the estate. The lender is bound to inquire into the necessity for the charge, and to satisfy himself that the manager is acting for the benefit of the estate. But if he does so inquire and acts honestly, the real existence of an alleged sufficient and reasonably credited necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of his charge, and he is not bound to see to the application of the money. *HUNOONAN PERSHAD PANDEY v. the purchase not only to show that, under the circumstances of the case, either the guardian had the power to sell or that the purchaser reasonably supposed he had such power, but, further, that the whole transaction, so far as regarded the purchaser's part in it, was bond fide. Following the principle laid down by the Court in the case of Kanailal Jowhari v. Kaminee Dabee, 1 B. L. R., O. C., 31 note, it was held that, when either the person who sells labours under disqualification, or the purchaser stands in a fiduciary relation to the owner of the property, the bond fides of the dealing cannot be presumed, but must be made out by the purchaser. *ROOP NARAIN SINGH v. 182. — Suit to set aside sale made by guardian—Act XL of 1858, s. 18—Fraud or collusion—Purchaser.—Where a plaintiff alleges fraud or illegality as a ground for setting aside a sale made under s. 18, the onus lies upon him to make out a prima facie case of fraud or illegality, and to show that the debt, which formed the consideration for the sale in such case, was one for which the minor was not responsible. PER PRINSEP, J.—A stranger purchasing from a guardian, acting under the authority granted under s. 18 of Act XL of 1858, will be entitled to every protection from the Courts, so long as it is not shown that he acted in a fraudulent or collusive manner, knowing that the debts, for the liquidation of which the purchase-money would be applied, were not debts lawfully binding on the minor. The burden of proof in such a case would lie heavily on the person seeking to set aside the alienation. But where the purchaser is himself the creditor, and therefore has the means of satisfying a Court as to the origin and nature of the debts and how they are binding on the minor, the burden of proof is shifted on the purchaser, when the plaintiff has established a prima facie case. *SIKHER CHUND v. a Mahomedan wife, who had left her husband's protection on account of ill-usage, for recovery, among other property, of certain securities belonging to her which had got into the husband's possession, and the detention of which he justified on the ground that he had purchased them from her, and on their endorsement and delivery to him had paid the full value for them, the correct principle as to the onus of the proof is that, although the wife may have failed to establish affirmatively the precise case alleged by her, her husband, having admitted the receipt of the securities from her, was bound to show something more than mere endorsement and delivery; that the relation of the parties being what it was, it lay upon him to prove that the transactions which he set up were bond fide sales and purchases, and that he actually gave full value for what he received from her; and where it was proved that the wife had the securities while under her husband's protection, and some had passed from her to him and others to his creditors, and that the wife left her husband's house in destitution, the proof adduced by the husband as to the sale for full consideration to him must be full and clear, and such as to satisfy a Court of Justice that the transactions were conducted fairly and properly, and with a due regard to the rights and interests of the wife. Where it was in proof that a portion of the immoveable property of the wife had passed to a bond fide purchaser under conveyances executed by the wife to her husband or to such purchaser, the burden of proof in a suit by her to recover the property is upon her, as she seeks to be relieved from the effect of her own conveyances, the execution of which she does not dispute against one who, if not an absolute stranger, stands in no fiduciary relation to her. BUZLOOR RUHEEM v. 196. ———— Suit after unsuccessful intervention under s. 77, Act X of 1859.—Plaintiff's suit for rent against the raiyats of certain land alleged to belong to a mouzah (Baboolee) which they had bought at an auction sale having been dismissed in consequence of defendant's intervention, under s. 77, Act X of 1859, they brought an action against her to recover possession. The defence was that the land in dispute did not belong to plaintiffs' mouzah, but to defendant's mouzah. Gyrutpore. Held that the plaintiffs were bound to prove their own case, and to show that the land belonged to their purchased estate (Baboolee). In this case, however, both parties had consented to have the case decided on the question whether mouzah Gyrutpore was or was not in existence, and the defendant could not therefore make out a new case in special appeal. MOONDUR BIBE v. under s. 77, Act X of 1859,—Held that all the plaintiff had to do in a regular suit brought by him in consequence was to prove that he was entitled to the rent from the under-tenant. It was not necessary for him to prove that his land was valid lakhiraj. RAJ CHUNDER GHOSE v. JOY CHUNDER DUTT [12 W. R., 197]

198. ———— Civil Procedure Code, s. 73.—Where the plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain property which he alleged he had purchased from H, and proved his purchase, and B, the mother of H, intervened and contended that the property was her own and purchased for herself and not on behalf of H,—Held the onus was on B to prove the title. JAGGADANAND MISSE v. 199. ———— In a suit upon a registered kobala for possession of certain property the appellant intervened alleging a prior purchase by him from the plaintiff's vendor, and was made a defendant. On the plaintiffs having proved their title against the original defendants, the lower Courts held that the onus was on the appellant, who was not shown to be actually in possession, to prove his allegation. Held that the lower Courts were right in so holding. Jaggadanand Misser v. 200. ———— Proof of title.—A plaintiff who sues by right of inheritance for the recovery of lands in the possession, not illegal or forcible, of defendants, to the rents whereof it was held in a previous suit, in which he intervened, that he had not been in the actual enjoyment, is bound to prove as well his title to the estate as his lineal descent from, or relation in such degree of contiguity as would entitle him to part succession to, the original acquirer thereof. CHYTUN MYER v. LUKHRE CHURN PATNAIK 8 W. R., 258

201. ———— Suit for kabuliati—Act X of 1859, s. 77—Intervenor.—In a suit to obtain a kabuliati, the defendant admitted the plaintiff's title. A third party intervened (under s. 77, Act X of 1859) alleging that he was in actual receipt and enjoyment of the rent. Held that the onus was on the intervenor to prove that he was bond fide in actual receipt and enjoyment of the rent, and on the plaintiff to prove his possession. BAHARULLA v. arrears of rent by a party setting up a title intermediate between him and the raiyat, on the ground of a miras pottah obtained from the mortgagor subsequently to the mortgage, he (W) sued to have his right declared to the rents payable by the raiyat. Held that it was not only not necessary for the plaintiff to prove possession, but the very ground he took was want of possession, his cause of action being that he was prevented from enjoying the usufruct. Held also that it was for the defendant to show that the incumbrance did not injure the outturn of the property. GOBIND CHUNDER BANERJEE v. 203. Allegation that lands are held under different title.—Where a raiyat holds lands of considerable extent under a zamindar, and alleges that one or two plots occupied by him are held under a different title, the onus is on him to prove his allegation. RAM COOMAR ROY v. BEJOY GOBIND BURAL

204. Allegation of independent title.—Suit to confirm title.—In a suit by the lessee of the purchaser of the rights and interests of the first defendant to obtain possession of some portions of land alleged to fall within the share of the zamindari so purchased, defendants contended that the plots which were the subject of suit, although falling within the ambit of the zamindari, did not in fact form a portion of it, but were lakhiraj lands belonging to themselves by a title independent of the title to the zamindari. The evidence showed the principal defendant to have been in receipt of the rents and profits of the land in suit, as well as of his share of the zamindari. Held that the onus lay upon the defendants to show the alleged independent title; failing to do so, the prima facie title made out by the plaintiff ought to prevail. SHUM-DAN ALI v. MUTHOORNATH DUTT

14 W. R., 236

205. Rival tenants—Resignation of tenancy.—In a suit between two rival tenants claiming to hold under the same landlord, where one of them admitted the tenancy of the other, but pleaded resignation by him of his tenancy and a lease to himself, the onus of proof was held to rest upon him who made the allegation. KISHEN CHUNDER SHAHA v. I. L. R., 14 Calc., 382

208. Transferability of tenures.—In a suit brought to recover possession of certain lands forming part of the patni estate of the plaintiffs and constituting the raiyati holding of one M, which lands were sold in execution of a money-decree against M and purchased by the defendant, the defendant set up that the tenure held by M was of a permanent and transferable nature. Held that the onus of proving the transferability of this tenure was upon the defendant. DOYA CHAND SHAHA v. ANUND CHUNDER SEN, I. L. R., 14 Calc., 382, not followed. KRIPAMOYI DABIA v. DURGA GOVIND SIKKAR

209. Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 106, 108—Transferability of tenancy—Suit by zamindar to set aside a Court-sale of his raiyati's interest.—A zamindari raiyat mortgaged the land comprised in his holding, and the mortgagee, having sued and obtained a decree on his mortgage, attached the mortgagor's interest in the land and purchased it at the Court-sale held in execution of his decree. The zamindar, who had intervened unsuccessfully in execution, now sued to set aside the sale and to eject the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor from the land. Neither party adduced evidence. Held that there was no presumption that the tenant was a tenant-at-will, nor was there a presumption that the tenancy was not transferable—such presumptions being contrary to ss. 106 and 108 of the Transfer of Property Act respectively. The burden of proof therefore lay on the plaintiff and had not been discharged, and the suit must consequently be dismissed. APPA RAU v. SUBBANNA

210. Non-transferable tenure.—Where a plaintiff sets up a case of an exceptional nim osut-howla, alleging it to be not transferable, the plaintiff should be called on to prove the allegation, before a defendant in possession, under an order of a Revenue Court, can be called on to prove title. HURRO SOONDERY DEBIA v. 213. ——— Allegation that lands are sir—Sale in execution of decree.—Where a person whose proprietary rights in a mehal have been sold in execution of a decree, alleges that land held by him at the time of such sale was held as sir, the burden of proof lies on him. HARI DAS v. GHANSHAM NARAIN . . . I. L. R., 6 All., 286

214. ——— Suit for possession of ayma land—Identification by plaintiff.—Where a plaintiff establishes a prima facie case of the identity of ayma land which he claims through his ancestor, who had been allowed by the Collector to retain it, it will rest with defendant to prove that the land is his own, or that it is not the ayma land which the plaintiff's ancestor once held. MOLLA ABDOOR RUB v. 215. ——— Gorabundi tenure—Transferability, Proof of.—The onus lies on a plaintiff claiming in virtue of a purchase of the tenure from a former holder to be entitled to possession of gorabundi lands, to prove that such lands are transferable. CHUTTERBHUI BHARTI v. JANKI PROSAUD SINGH . . . 4 C. L. R., 298

216. ——— Khoti tenure, Proof of—Suit for rent.—In a suit by a kabuliadar khot for rent from cultivators holding lands in a khoti village, the onus does not lie on the plaintiff to prove the land to be khoti; but the holder of land in a khoti estate must prove that he is exempted from paying rent according to the custom of the country. MUHAMMAD YAKOUB v. MUHAMMAD ISMAIL . . . 9 Bom., 278

217. ——— Suit for value of trees cut by tenant—Nature of tenure.—There is no presumption that orchard lands in Behar are held on a bhaoli tenure, there being many instances of orchards there held on a nukdi tenure. The onus of proving the special nature of the tenure is on the zamindar suing for the value of trees cut down, and not on the tenant-defendant. DOOMUN SINGH v. SOORUN LALL . . . 2 W. R., 12

218. ——— Orchard land—Possession of planter of trees.—Although generally it may be taken that land whereon an orchard is planted belongs to the zamindar, and has been granted to a stranger to plant trees thereon, in which case it reverts to the zamindar after the trees have disappeared and the land has become arable, yet when it is asserted that the land belongs to the planter of the orchard, having been acquired by purchase, it is for the zamindar to prove that the land belongs to him and was given for plantation; and in the absence of such proof the holder or occupant may rely on his long possession. DHUNEE RAM v. 220. ——— Suit by talukhdar purchaser at sale—Dispossession and disputed title.—A talukhdar who had purchased at an execution-sale the under-tenure of one of his tenants, sued him to obtain possession of the land contained in the purchased holding, of some of which he said he had been dispossessed, and in regard to the remainder of which his title was disputed. Held that the deputa-tion of an Ameen was improper, and that the onus lay on the plaintiff to prove his case. SHUSTER RAM PAUL v. 221. ——— Lease of land of particular nature—Proof that it came under that designation.—Where a landlord leased out some land to a tenant, reserving to himself only such portion of it as fell under the definition of nila zamin,—Held that it was for the landlord, in a suit for the possession of such nila zamin, to bring evidence to prove what portion of the land leased out was nila; and that, in the absence of such evidence, the whole land must be taken as having been leased out to the tenant. REILY v. 222. ——— Suit for possession—Dispute as to ground and nature of possession.—In a suit for possession of a portion of land on the allegation that it had belonged to plaintiff as his ancestral property up to the date of his being ousted, when the defendant, admitting the alleged possession, contended that it had been not that of an owner, but only permissive possession as that of a tenant,—Held that the burden of proof lay on the defendant. BOISTUB CHURN SEIN v. TRAHEE RAM SEIN

[15 W. R., 32]

223. ——— Suit to recover share of holding after sale in execution of decree for rent—Proof of status as tenant and recognition of division of tenure.—In a suit to recover a share of a holding, the whole of which had been sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, the plaintiff, who claimed to hold a divided portion of the tenure, was held bound to prove either that such division had been recognized and ratified by the zamindar or that the latter received rent from him, i.e., he would have to prove his status as tenant in respect of the share in question. HURHUR SINGH v. OOMA KOORE . . . 16 W. R., 93

224. ——— Exercise of right incidental to tenure—Objection to right.—When a party objects to the exercise by another of an ordinary legal right incidental to his tenure, it is for the objecting party to give some prima facie evidence as to the grounds on which that objection is founded. GYARAM MUNDUL v. 225. ——— Right of occupancy—Permanent cultivators—Suit for ejectment.—The defendant's ancestors were the only cultivating tenants of the lands of a certain temple from the year 1829, and in a suit brought by the temple trustees against one of the defendants in 1858 it was found that the occupancy of the defendant's ancestors dated back at least to 1806. In 1833, the defendant's ancestor was recognized by the Collector, who then managed the temple, as an hereditary raiyat. In the paimaish account of 1827, defendant's ancestor was described as a "cultivating parakudi ulavada," a term which does not necessarily imply a right of occupancy. Held, in a suit by the trustee of the temple to eject the defendants after notice to quit, that the burden of proving that a right of occupancy was not an incident of defendants' tenure lay on the plaintiff. KRISHNASAMI PILLAI v. VARADARAJA AYYANGAR. I. L. R., 5 Mad., 345

226. ——— Right of occupancy—Permanent cultivator—Paracudi.—The defendant's ancestors or predecessors in title were the cultivating tenants of the lands of a certain temple from a date not later than 1827, in which year they were so described in the paimaish accounts. In 1830 they executed a muchalka to the Collector, who then managed the temple, whereby they agreed among other things to pay certain dues. They were described in the muchalka as paracudis. In 1857 the plaintiff's predecessors took over the management of the temple from, and executed a muchalka to, the Collector, whereby he agreed among other things not to eject the raiyats as long as they paid kist. In 1863, the dues (which were payable separately) having fallen into arrear, the manager of the temple sued to eject the defendants. Held that the burden of proving the permanent character of the tenure set up by the defendants lay on them. *Krishnasami v. vating raiyat in the zamindari, a notice to quit, now sued to eject him from his holding. The defendant pleaded that he and his ancestors had been jirayati raiyats from time immemorial, and it was found that their holding had lasted at least one hundred and fifty years. The defendant had executed and delivered to the plaintiff a muchalka for one year, and he had made no default in payment of rent. Held that the onus was on the plaintiff, and as she had failed to prove that the defendant's tenancy had commenced under her or her ancestors, the suit should be dismissed. VENKATA MAHALAKSHMAMMA v. RAMAJOGI. I. L. R., 16 Mad., 271

230. ——— Right of tenant to dig a tank on his land.—In a suit by a zamindar alleging that the defendant, his tenant, had dug a tank on his land, and thereby done him damage by converting the land from its original state, and the conversion is admitted by the defendant, but his defence is that he had a right to convert it, the onus is on the defendant to show his right to dig the tank. In the absence of clear proof of the nature of his tenure, he should at least show that the digging the tank is a fair and reasonable use of the land, and one which will not be to the detriment of the zamindar. *TARINI HARAN BOSE v. 231. ——— Proof of zamindari rights—Right to garden planted with trees.—The owner of a bagh in an estate in which he is not possessed of any zamindari rights must, if he claim a higher right than that ordinarily possessed by a tenant planter or the successor of such a planter, produce evidence in support of his claim; but when the bagh has been admittedly planted by a zamindar and has been, on the sale of his zamindari rights, reserved by him, it is incumbent on the purchaser to prove that by the reservation the vendor reserved only the interest which a tenant-planter would have possessed in the bagh. ALI BUKSH v. XI of 1825.—A suit for the assessment of lands accreted to a zimma tenure must be tried upon s. 51, Reg. VIII of 1793, the burden being on the plaintiff to prove that the tenure is liable to the assessment sought; and the provisions of that law are not affected by Reg. XI of 1825, as regards the mode in which, the condition on which, and the burden of proof with which, the zamindar may proceed to assess. PANTOY v. JUGGUT CHUNDER DUTT. 9 W. R., 379

Plaintiff, being a raiyat without a right of occupancy, but one who had got an amulnamah, sued for a pottah at the rate fixed by the amulnamah. Held that the amulnamah formed the basis of a special contract between the parties, and took their case out of the purview of the ss. 5 and 8 of the Rent Law; and that by the terms of the amulnamah the defendant was bound to give plaintiff a pottah on fair and equitable rates ("upajukta"), which were to depend on the rates which he himself obtained from Government. Held that the onus of proving that the rate which he claimed was fair and equitable was upon the plaintiff. KISHEN PERSHAD SINGH v. 241. ——— Rate of rent, Proof of.—Evidence that rent stated in lease has been realized.—The mere fact that a tenant some time ago gave a kabuliast for a limited period at a particular rate of rent is not sufficient in itself to throw upon the defendant the entire burden of proving what the present rent is, without any evidence on the part of the landlord that the rent specified in the kabuliast had ever been realized from him. MO-KUNDA CHANDRA SARMA v. ARPAN ALI SHAIKH [2 C. W. N., 47]

242. ——— Shifting of onus—Claim for rent—Written receipts, if necessary proofs of payment—Written receipts, if primary evidence.—Written receipts for payments are important, but by no means necessary as proof; nor are they of the nature of primary evidence, the loss of which must be shown in order to let in secondary. On the evidence in the case it was held that, though the case is a most obscure and of an unsatisfactory character, and that, although the plaintiff had given good reasons for holding that such part of the defendant's case as related to the missing receipts was not worthy of belief, yet that the defendant did give evidence of payment of the rent claimed, sufficient to throw back again on the plaintiff the onus of proving that the rent was still due. Plaintiff's evidence was silent on the crucial point of payment, her Dewan kept out of the way of examination, and no sufficient grounds had been assigned for reversing the decrees of the High Court. RAMOSWAR KOER v. BHARAT PERSHAD SAHI 4 C. W. N., 18

243. ——— Evidence—Plea of payment.—In a suit by a landlord against his tenant for arrears of rent due for a portion of the year 12-3 (1876), the defendant pleaded payment and called as his witness the plaintiff's agent, who admitted the receipt of certain payments from the defendant's undertenants during the time for which the arrears were demanded, but swore that they were payments made in respect of arrears due on account of previous years. The lower Appellate Court, reversing the decree of the Court of first instance, gave the defendant credit for the payments so admitted. Held that the lower Appellate Court was wrong; that the defendant, having pleaded payment, was bound to prove that the admitted payments were in respect of that portion of the year 1283 for which the arrears were claimed. S. 12 of the Rent Law applies to receipts given directly by the landlord to the tenant, and not to receipts given to third persons. SYEFUN v. BUDDER SOHAY [L. L. R., 7 Cal., 582]

244. ——— Proof of determination of tenancy—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 20.—The defendant held under a lease from the plaintiff which expired in 1867, when he gave up possession without any notice. In a suit subsequently brought against him for arrears of rent of 1867, 1868, and 1869, — Held that the onus was on the plaintiff to prove that the defendant held on after the term of the lease had expired. No written notice of relinquishment was necessary. S. 20, Bengal Act VIII of 1869, did not apply. TILAK PATAK v. MAHABIR PANDAY. 7 B. L. R., Ap., 11: 15 W. R., 454

246. ——— Alleged possession of portions only of land.—In a suit to recover arrears of rent under a kabuliat the defendant who had paid rent for upwards of four or five years pleaded that he had obtained possession of portions only of the lands demised. Held (reversing the decision of FIELD, J.) that the onus was upon the defendant. BANY MADHOB MOOKERJEE v. SRIDHUR DEB GHUTTOOK. 10 C. L. R., 555

247. ——— Suit for ejectment and for arrears of rent—Disputed rate of rent.—In a suit for arrears of rent, and for ejectment in consequence of non-payment, where defendant challenged the rate claimed as well as plaintiff's right to sue alone, — Held that the onus lay on plaintiff to prove his claim to the rate of rent sued for and to show that he was sole proprietor. ASHRUF v. RAM KISHEN GHOSH. 23 W. R., 289

248. ——— Suit for ejectment—Ground for retaining possession, Proof of.—In a suit for ejectment by landlord against tenant after proof of due service of notice, the onus is on the tenant to show any ground for retaining possession. NUBO COOMAR GHOSH v. OOOIE SHIKDAR [23 W. R., 288]

249. ——— Nature of tenure, Evidence of.—In a suit in ejectment valued under R100, the defendants, who were sued as yearly tenants, replied that their tenure was a mirasi gujasta tenure, and in proof of their allegation adduced evidence which was not displaced by the plaintiffs. The lower Courts considered that defendant's allegation was well founded. Held that, there being evidence of the defendant's allegation, the plaintiffs, having failed to make out a prima facie case, were not entitled to a decree for ejectment. BYJI NATH SAHOO v. RAMDOUR ROY. 7 C. L. R., 389

250. ——— Suit by landlord to eject tenant on expiration of tenancy.—Where a landlord sues to eject a raiyat on the ground of his tenancy having expired, the tenant is not called upon to state the character of his tenancy until the plaintiff has given prima facie proof that it is of a terminable character, and that it has terminated. A sued to eject B on the ground that a temporary settlement effected with him had expired. B set up a gujasta title to the land. The lower Courts disbelieved plaintiff, but called on B to support the title he had set up, and he failing to do so, gave A a decree. Held that A's suit should have been dismissed when it was found that the evidence he put forward was unworthy of credit. BULLEN AHEER v. NISHAN SINGH [3 C. L. R., 209]

251. ——— Suit to eject tenant holding over after expiry of lease.—In a suit to eject a tenant holding over after the expiry of a pottah which was merely for a number of years, the onus is on the landlord to show that the tenure was such that the express limit of years may be fairly applied to the possession and construed to give the right of re-entry. ROY ODITYE NARAIN SINGH v. UBEHURUN ROY. 4 W. R., Act X, 1

SHREE DYAL PAULEET v. DWARKANATH SOOKUL [2 W. R., Act X, 54]

252. ——— Right of occupancy.—Where a tenant holding under a terminable lease which does not provide for re-entry makes no allegation of previous possession, and there is no admission of it on the other side, the tenant is bound to go out at the expiration of his term; and if he claims a right of further occupancy, it is for him to prove that right. PUDDOMONEE DOSSIA v. JHOLLA PALLY [7 W. R., 283]

253. ——— Ejectment—Right of occupancy.—In a suit by a zamindar against a raiyat for recovery of possession of land, of which the plaintiff alleged he had granted the defendant a lease and taken a kabuliat, and that the lease had expired, the defence was that the defendant did not hold under any lease from the plaintiff, that the kabuliat was not genuine, and that the defendant by his holding had acquired a right of occupancy. Held the onus was on the plaintiff to prove the kabuliat, and not on the defendant to prove that he had acquired a right of occupancy. Therefore, where the plaintiff failed to prove the kabuliat, the suit was held to be rightly dismissed, though the defendant failed to show any right of occupancy. WALLAH ALLEE v. GOLAM GOUS

254. — Refusal to quit after notice.—In a suit by a zamindar to obtain khas possession of land within his estate, if a defendant is a middleman, the right of plaintiff follows as a matter of course, unless defendant can make out his claim to exclude the zamindar; but if defendant is a raiyat, plaintiff must show some cause of action beyond the bare circumstance of defendant's refusal to quit after notice under X of 1859. He must show that the raiyat is of a class liable to eviction. LALLA JOYNATH SAHAI DEO v. LUTCHEN CHRISTIAN

256. — Suit for possession by tenant—Appropriation of crops by another tenant.—In a suit to recover possession where a plaintiff had held over the term of his lease and raised a crop which was appropriated by defendant (an adjacent tenant), on the ground that the disputed land was his alluvion, Held that the onus lay upon the defendants (tenant and zamindar) to show that the land held by the plaintiff was removed from the control of the owner of the estate by circumstances which brought it under the control of the defendant-tenant. HEMA PANDY v. [24 W. R., 108]

257. — Suit to set aside order of Settlement officer—Sonthal Pergunnahs Settlement Regulation (III of 1872), ss. 24, 25.—In a suit instituted in January 1887 by a plaintiff to set aside a settlement made under Regulation III of 1872, and to recover khas possession of a mouzah, alleging that the defendant held the lands as chakran, and that the services for which he held them had ceased, the defendant pleaded that the tenure was dar-mokurari, that the lands had been settled as such in June 1877, and that the suit was consequently barred by the special limitation provided by s. 25 of the Regulation. It was contended that the onus of proving the tenure to the dar-mokurari, which had been thrown on the defendant, had been wrongly so thrown on him, as the suit was substantially one to set aside a decree. Held that the onus of proving the validity and propriety of the settlement proceedings upon which he relied had been properly thrown on the defendant. NADIAR CHAND SINGH v. 271. ———— Suit to recover possession of land—Limitation.—A suit to recover possession of an unenclosed piece of ground must be brought within twelve years from the time the cause of action accrued, and in deciding this the issue is, not that the plaintiff must show that he exercised some right of ownership over the ground within the twelve years preceding the filing of the action, but that twelve years have not elapsed between the day the defendant interfered with the plaintiff's possession and the date on which the plaintiff filed his claim. SAGANGOWDA BIN BASANGOWDA v. BASAPA BIN CHENAPA . . . 9 Bom., 62

272. Limitation—Settlement.—In a suit for possession, where defendant denies plaintiff's title and sets up a defence involving the plea of limitation, the question of limitation does not depend upon whether defendant was in possession, but upon whether plaintiff was in possession. Where defendant admitted that the permanent settlement was ordered to be made with the party in possession, and that it was made within twelve years prior to the suit with the party from whom plaintiff claimed,—Held that, until the contrary was shown, that party was rightly presumed to be in possession, and plaintiff's claim was not barred by limitation. *MAHOMED KOBEER v. [24 W. R., 315]

273. Suit for possession—Proof of title.—In a suit to obtain possession, where defendant pleads limitation, plaintiff is bound not only to prove his title, but also to show affirmatively that his cause of action accrued within twelve years before the commencement of the suit; and he must succeed upon the strength of his own title, not upon the weakness of his opponent's. LUTCHOO KHAN v. FOLEY . . . 24 W. R., 273

274. Suit for possession—Limitation.—In a suit for possession of land the defendants claimed to hold under a valid miras tenure so as to be entitled to the ground rent from the raiyats, and to pay the plaintiff who was the superior landlord merely the miras rent. Held that, the plaintiff being admitted to be landlord, the onus was upon the defendants to prove either that they had a valid miras tenure, or that they had held adversely to the plaintiffs as mirasdars for more than twelve years, and that the plaintiffs had notice of such adverse holding. Prahlad Sen v. Budhu Singh, 2 B. L. R., P. C., 111, cited and followed. OGRA KANT CHOWDHREE v. MOHESH CHUNDER SICKDAR

[4 C. L. R., 40]

275. Disposition—Presumption—Onus probandi—Limitation—Joint owners, Adverse possession between.—Under the former Limitation Act the cause of action, and under the present law the event from which limitation is declared to run, must have occurred within the prescribed period, and it lies on the plaintiff to show this. Accordingly, where the suit is for possession and the cause of action is dispossession, the plaintiff is bound to prove possession and dispossession within twelve years. Possession is not necessarily the same thing as actual user. When land has been shown to have been in a condition unfitting it for actual enjoyment in the usual modes, at such a time and under such circumstances that that state naturally would, and probably did, continue till within twelve years before suit, it may properly be presumed that it did so continue, and that the previous possession continued also until the contrary is proved. Such a presumption is in no sense a conclusive one. Its bearing upon each particular case must depend upon the circumstances of that case. Many acts which would be clearly adverse, and might amount to dispossession as between a stranger and the true owner of land, would, between joint owners, naturally bear a different construction. MAHOMED ALI KHAN v. ABDUL GUNNY

276. Conflicting evidence of possession—Presumption of possession from title—Possession and actual user—Character of land in dispute—Mode of enjoyment.—It is only when the evidence of possession is strong on both sides and apparently equally balanced that the presumption that possession goes with title should prevail. The principle does not apply where the evidence of possession is equally unworthy of reliance on both sides. Dharm Sing v. Harpersad Sing, I. L. R., 12 Calc., 88, explained. Possession, however, is not necessarily the same as actual user. When therefore the plaintiff has to prove possession of land in dispute within the statutory period of limitation, if there is anything special in the character of the land, for example, when it is permanently or temporarily incapable of actual enjoyment in any one of the customary modes, a presumption in favour of continuance of possession, though in no sense a conclusive one, may arise. Mahomed Ali Khan v. Abdul Gunny, I. L. R., 9 Calc., 744; 12 C. L. R., 257, referred to. THAKUR SINGH v. BHOGRAJ SINGH . . . I. L. R., 27 Calc., 25

277. Suit for possession—Previous dispossession—Limitation—Evidence.—In every suit for the recovery of land, on the allegation of previous dispossession by the defendant, the plaintiff must start his case by showing that, at some time within twelve years previous to the institution of the suit, he has been in possession of the land sued for. Perhlad Sen v. Rajender Kishore Singh, 12 Moore's I. A., 887; Dawkins v. Lord Penrhyn, 4 App. Cases, 951; and Noyes v. Crawley, 10 Ch. D., 81-86, cited. BHOOTHNATH CHATTERJEE v. KEDARNATH BANERJEE

Date of dispossession or discontinuance of possession.—The claimants had shown that they formerly were proprietors of the land to which they alleged title, and from which they claimed to oust the defendants; but they had been dispossessed, or their possession had been discontinued, some years before this suit was brought by them and the land was occupied by the defendants who denied their title. That being so, the burden of proof was on the claimants to prove their possession at some time within the twelve years prescribed by art. 152 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877) next preceding the suit. That the claimants certainly showed an anterior title was not enough, without proof of their possession within twelve years, to shift the burden of proof on to the defence to show that the defendants were entitled to retain possession. MOHIMA CHUNDER MOZUMDAR v. II, arts. 142, 144—Burden of proof.*—The plaintiff, who was the sister of the defendant, sued in 1888 to recover from him a moiety of a parabha purchased by them jointly in 1877. In 1878 the plaintiff went to live elsewhere, but from time to time returned and spent a few days with the defendant on the land in suit. The defendant pleaded limitation. Held that the Limitation Act, sch. II, art. 144, applied to the suit, and the burden of proving adverse possession lay on the defendant. ALIMA v. KUTTI . . . I. L. R., 14 Mad., 96

281. Limitation Act (XV of 1877), arts. 142 and 144.—In cases falling under art. 142 of the Limitation Act the plaintiff must at the outset show possession within twelve years, and cannot rest merely on a proof of title; while in cases falling under art. 144 the plaintiff may rest content with proof of title only in the first instance, and the burden lies on the defendants to show that they have had a possession inconsistent with the title of the plaintiff for more than twelve years before suit. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain land, together with mesne profits until recovery of possession, alleging that he had obtained possession under his sale and that his possession was obstructed by the defendants. Held that the suit fell under art. 142, and not 144, of the Limitation Act, and that it was for the plaintiff to show that he, or those under whom he claimed, had been in possession within twelve years before suit. Rao Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan, I. L. R., 5 All., 1; L. R., 9 I. A., 99, and Mohima Chunder Mozumdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neogi, I. L. R., 16 Cal., 473; L. R., 16 I. A., 23, explained. FAKI ABDULLA v. raised the point of adverse possession for more than twelve years.—Held that the onus lay upon the plaintiff to show that the claim was not barred by the defendant's adverse possession by proving that his vendor had been in possession within twelve years before the date of sale under art. 142, sch. II of the Limitation Act. KASHINATH SITARAM OZE v. SHRIDHAR MAHADHY PATANKAR I. L. R., 13 Bom., 343

283. Suit for possession of immovable property—Question of title—Limitation Act, s. 28.—Where a suit for the recovery of possession of immovable property is resisted by a plea of adverse possession for more than twelve years, the question of limitation becomes a question of title, and it lies upon the plaintiff in the first instance to give satisfactory prima facie evidence of his possession within twelve years of the suit. Mohima Chunder Mozumdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neogi, I. L. R., 16 Cal., 473, and Parmanand Misr v. Sahib Ali, I. L. R., 11 All., 484, referred to. JAFAR HUSAIN v. MASHUQ ALI [I. L. R., 14 All., 193

284. Suit for possession of immovable property.—In a suit for possession of immovable property it is for the plaintiff to show by some prima facie evidence that he has a subsisting title not extinguished by the operation of limitation before the defence can be called upon to substantiate a plea of adverse possession. Parmanand Misr v. Sahib Ali, I. L. R., 11 All., 488, and Jafar Husain v. Mashuq Ali, I. L. R., 14 All., 193, referred to. In dealing with the question of possession as between brothers and sisters in native families regard must be had to the conditions of life under which such families live, and to the fact that in such families the management of the property of the family is, by reason of the seclusion of the female members, ordinarily left in the hands of the male members. In the case of such families slight evidence of enjoyment of income arising from the property is sufficient prima facie proof of possession. Fazul Karim v. 285. Suit for possession—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 142—Evidence and proof of possession.—A suit for the proprietary possession of land was defended on the ground of limitation, resting on the defendant's possession, displacing the plaintiff's case that her predecessor in title had possessed the land within twelve years before the suit. This defendant had a possession which was admitted to have extended back for seven years before the suit. The documentary evidence showing that he had been in possession for more than five years immediately preceding those seven years was exactly similar to the evidence which accompanied his possession during that period. The evidence consisted of a series of documents such as were usually given to and received by the possessor of lands, and they extended throughout the period in dispute, going back far behind the twelve years which would bar. It was not necessary to consider whether the burthen of proof was shifted merely by the seven years' admitted possession, as the additional evidence raised the inference that the same possession had continued for more than twelve years. Held that the burthen of rebutting this inference had not been discharged by evidence given by the plaintiff, while the evidence for the defendant had amply sustained the burthen originally laid upon him to show his twelve years' possession. INNASIMUTU UDAYAN v. UPAKARATH UDAYAN [I. L. R., 23 Mad., 10

286. ————— Ejectment, Suit for—Limitation.—In an action of ejectment the plaintiff need not fail merely because he cannot prove that he has been in possession of the land claimed within twelve years; he must show that his cause of action (that is, the taking possession of the land by another person) has accrued within that period. PANDURANG GOVIND v. BALKRISHNA HARI [6 Bom., A. C., 125

287. ————— Suit for possession—Ejectment—Evidence—Previous possession.—Where, in a suit for possession of land, the plaintiff proves merely that he has been in possession of the disputed land at some time within twelve years previous to the filing of the plaint, such evidence is not sufficient to throw upon the defendant the burden of proving his title to the land. Wise v. Amirwanissa Khatoon, L. R., 7 I. A., 73, followed; and Gour Paroy v. Wooma Soondures Debia, 12 W. R., 472, cited. DEBI CHURN BOIDO v. ISSUR CHUNDER MANJEE [I. L. R., 9 Calc., 39; 11 C. L. 288. ————— Ejectment, Suit for—Proof of possession—Dispossession.—In an ejectment suit, where the plaintiff claims land from which he alleges that he has been dispossessed, the general rule is that the burden is upon the plaintiff to show possession and dispossession within twelve years, or, at least, that the cause of action arose within twelve years, and this rule is not intended to be interfered with by the Privy Council in Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis, 7 C. L. R., 864. MORO DESAI v. RAMCHANDRA DESAI . I. L. R., 6 Bom., 508

289. ————— Right of Crown to waste lands—Title suit by Crown for declaration of title and possession.—Assuming that the Crown has the right to oust any person who, without sanction, occupies waste land which has not been appropriated for any public purpose, it cannot, by a suit brought for a declaration of title or for ejectment, the date at which the cause of action arose not being stated in the plaint, compel a defendant to prove possession for sixty years. As a general rule, a plaintiff must not only show he has a title, but that he has a subsisting title, which he has not lost by the prescriptive section of the Limitation Act. The probable explanation of the ruling in Radha Gobind Roy's case, 7 C. L. R., 864, is that, when a plaintiff proves title and possession, it is to be presumed that his possession continues till the defendant proves that the possession was interrupted, but that, where the plaintiff can prove title only, and not possession, he must prove that the adverse possession of the defendant, or the acts of which he complains as impugning his title, occurred within the period prescribed by the Limitation Act. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. VIRA RAYAN . I. L. R., 9 Mad., 176

290. ————— Waste land subsequently made cultivable—Presumption—Constructive possession.—The doctrine of constructive possession applies only in favour of a rightful owner, and must not, as a rule, be extended in favour of a wrong-doer, whose possession must be confined to land of which he is actually in possession. In a suit for the possession of lands formerly uncultivable, but subsequently brought under cultivation, the District Judge had allowed the plea of limitation to prevail against the plaintiff upon a finding—based, not upon evidence of actual possession by the defendants, but upon an inference from part of the evidence—that the defendants had been in constructive possession for over twelve years prior to the suit. Held that, so far as the judgment and decree of the District Judge related to certain plots described as patit or uncultivable lands, they must be set aside, and the case remanded to the District Judge to determine (a) how far the presumption in favour of the plaintiff as to the continuance of the uncultivable state of the lands till within twelve years of suit applied; and (b) how far that presumption had been rebutted by evidence of actual possession on the part of the defendants. MOHINI MOHAN ROY v. PROMODA NATH ROY [I. L. R., 24 Cal., 256; 1 C. W. N., 304

291. ————— Dispossession—Ejectment—Evidence—Proof of title.—In June 1878 the plaintiff sued the defendant for the recovery of possession of certain land. At the trial it was proved that he had been continuously in peaceable possession of the land until the month of May 1878, when he was forcibly and illegally dispossessed by the defendant. Held that the evidence was sufficient to call upon the defendant to show his title to the land. *MOHABEER PERSHAD SINGH v. 292. ————— Suit for possession after wrongful dispossession—Proof of title.—In a suit for possession, it was found that the plaintiff had been in possession within twelve years from the institution of the suit, but he had been wrongfully dispossessed by the defendant. The plaintiff was unable to prove possession previous to being ousted for a longer period than eleven years. Held that, the onus by the defendant having been wrongful, the onus was not thereby shifted to the plaintiff, and that under the circumstances the defendants were bound to prove their title. *See Mohabeer Pershad Singh v. GOVERNMENT . . . 5 W. R., 136

294. ——— Limitation—Boundaries.—No proof of anterior title in the claimant such as would be involved in the decision of a question of boundaries in his favour can relieve him of the burden of proving that he was in possession within twelve years prior to suit, or shift it upon his adversaries so as to compel them to prove the time and manner of his dispossession. TARA SINGH v. JOY DOORGA DOSSEE . . . 11 W. R., 173

296. ——— Suit for possession—Limitation—Chur lands.—In a suit to recover possession of land under cultivation, when the defendant pleads adverse possession, it is, under ordinary circumstances, for the plaintiff to show prima facie that the cause of action upon which he is suing is not barred by limitation, and not for the defendant to prove his adverse possession in the first instance. When a suit is brought for possession of jungly or unculturable lands, or lands which have never been under cultivation, the rule is different, and the defendant must establish his adverse possession for more than twelve years. When a suit is brought for possession of chur or other land under cultivation at the time of the institution of the suit, but previously jungly or unculturable, the onus probandi still lies on the plaintiff; but on his proving that the chur was formed, or the land first became culturable, within twelve years before he instituted his suit, the onus is shifted to the defendant, who must establish his adverse possession for more than twelve years. MAHOMED IBRAHIM v. to plaintiff's village, but submerged at the time of settlement, if the plaintiff could show the identity of the land submerged with the land which has since been left dry, the onus is on the defendant to show that some other person had been in adverse possession for twelve years before the plaintiff preferred his claim, and that such adverse possession commenced from a time when plaintiff was in a position to dispute it. HUB SAHAL v. 299. ——— Suit for possession of alluvial land—Evidence of possession in absence of landmarks.—The plaintiff sued to recover a tract of chur land as parcel of his mouzah of J, the defendant alleging the said land to be a parcel of his mouzah of G. About the year 1830, a large tract of land was diluviated by the River Chutol within the mouzahs belonging respectively to the plaintiff and defendant, and after re-formation in 1837 a proceeding was taken by the plaintiff before the Magistrate under which he was ordered to be put in possession of a considerable tract of such newly-formed land, the Magistrate laying down the boundaries. After nearly twelve years (i.e., in 1849), the defendant's father brought a civil suit to set aside the Magistrate's decision, and the ultimate finding was that the plaintiff had been in possession of the land described in the Magistrate's order from and since the date of that order. Held that that decree must be taken to have established that the plaintiff was in possession of the land described in the Magistrate's order, and had continued in such possession; the question in the present suit being whether the lands now claimed are identical with those so described. Held also that the onus of proving that issue lay upon the plaintiff, because the foundation of his suit was that, having been in possession, he was dispossessed as a consequence of certain measurements made by Government officers. Held further that plaintiff had failed to sustain the burden of proof. He relied principally on the boundaries given by the Magistrate and certain maps prepared then and later as compared with the Government map of 1853; but their Lordships were unable to place firm reliance upon any inference drawn from these maps. Their Lordships were also of opinion that in questions of this kind, where the natural boundaries and landmarks have disappeared, evidence of possession was very important and satisfactory, and that there was no reason to distrust the witnesses of the respondent proving such possession. *GELJA KANT LAHORY CHOWDERY v. 300. ————— Right to alluvial land—Change in course of river—Boundaries.—Disputed settlement.—At the permanent settlement the River Gunduck divided mouzah Sohagpore (zillah Tihoot) from the village of Dumri (zillah Sarun). In 1837 the river got into its southern channel, and a quantity of chur land to the north was resumed by Government and settled with the zamindars of Sohagpore. In 1846 it was again settled with the same zamindars, who remained in possession until 1848, when the river having returned to its northern channel the deara land was claimed by proprietors on the southern or Sarun side of the river: the consequence was an Act IV of 1840 suit which was decided in favour of the zamindars of Sohagpore. In 1856, on the expiry of the last temporary settlement, the question arose with whom Government should engage for the revenue, and it was finally decided by the Board of Revenue that a settlement should be made with the zamindars of Dumri, who accordingly obtained possession. The Board's decision proceeded on two principles,—viz., that a usage existed that the main channel of the Gunduck should be the boundary of the zamindari, and that therefore the interest of the zamindars of Sohagpore had been of a limited, temporary, and conditional character. These zamindars then brought a suit to impeach this settlement and to recover possession. After decision, appeal, and remand, it was finally decided by the High Court that the land in dispute was identical with that formerly settled with the maliks of Sohagpore, who (it was assumed) had a permanent proprietary interest therein. Held that the proper issues to be tried were: first, whether the land had been settled in 1837 with the maliks of Sohagpore as proprietors of alluviums which had gradually accreted to their estate, or upon what other grounds such settlement was made, the onus of proving gradual accretion being on the plaintiffs; and, secondly, whether there was at the permanent settlement, and has been since, a clear and definite usage such as supposed by the Board of Revenue, the burden of proving the affirmative of this being on the defendant. *RAJENDUR PRATAB SAHOO v. onus lies on plaintiff to prove that, before disappearance or diluvion, the land in dispute was in the possession of his vendor. GOKOOL KRISTO SEN v. DAVID. 23 W. R., 443

302. ————— Re-formation on old site of lands after diluvion—Limitation.—Where, in a suit for possession of lands which have re-formed upon the old site after diluviation, the defendant relies upon a statutory title of twelve years' possession, the plaintiff, in order to succeed, must, according to the rule laid down in the case of Nitrasur Singh v. Nand Loll Singh, 8 Moore's I. A., 199, prove satisfactorily that the defendant has not been in possession for the period of twelve years next preceding the commencement of his suit. And where the evidence is not sufficient to support an affirmative finding that the whole of the lands claimed have re-formed within twelve years preceding the institution of the suit, it is incumbent on the plaintiff to show specifically the portion, if any, which has not so re-formed. Per JACKSON, J.—I am unable myself to see on what principle or by what means the Court could of itself undertake to divide the portion of the land which may have re-formed within twelve years from the larger part which evidently re-formed more than twelve years ago, and had been in the adverse possession of the defendants. *BUNJIT SINGH v. for him to show a possession by acts of ownership within the twelve years. MOHINI MOHUN DAS v. KRISHNO KISHORE DUTT

305. Alluvion and diluvion—Title—Limitation—Acts of ownership.—In a suit for declaration of title to, and recovery of possession of, alluvial lands which had been diluviated more than twelve years before the institution of the suit, the plaintiffs proved their title and possession up to the time of diluviation, and alleged that the lands had re-formed within twelve years, without alleging or proving possession during that period. The defendants, on the other hand, alleged that the re-formation had taken place more than twelve years before suit, and that they had acquired a title to the lands by adverse possession for that period. Held that in such a case the submergence of the lands after diluvion ought to be presumed until the contrary was shown, and that the onus of proving re-formation before twelve years and adverse possession was shifted to the defendants. Per WILSON, J.—As a general rule, where a plaintiff claims land from which he alleges he has been dispossessed, the burden is upon him to show possession and dispossession within twelve years. Proof of possession within twelve years does not necessarily mean proof of acts of ownership within that time. The nature of the proof of possession must depend on the nature of the case. There are many cases in which the party on whom the burden of proof in the first instance lies may shift the burden to the other side by proving facts giving rise to a presumption in his favour. In the case of lands gradually diluviated and gradually re-formed, if the diluviation has been more than twelve years before suit, the claimant, unless he can show possession since the re-formation, must at least show that he was in possession down to the date of the diluviation. Where the true owner is in possession at the time of diluviation, his possession is presumed to continue as long as the land continues submerged: probably also afterwards, until he is dispossessed. Per FIELD, J.—Although, according to the general rule, it lies upon the plaintiff, who is met with a plea of limitation, to show his own possession within twelve years before the institution of the suit when the property in dispute is capable of actual or visible possession, yet, in the case of property which is not susceptible of actual and visible possession, an exception from the nature of the thing must be made to the general rule. In such cases, when the title and possession have been proved to be in a certain person up to a certain point of time,—when there has been no transfer of the title to any third person, and there is no evidence that possession was exercised by a person other than the person having the title,—so long as actual visible possession was possible, the possession of the person having the title will be presumed to continue until the property has again become susceptible of actual visible possession. Proof of possession is presumptive proof of ownership, because men generally own the property which they possess. And if the ownership of property is proved, and there is nothing to show that the possession of such property is with any person other than the owner, it may fairly be presumed to be with the owner. Such a presumption then takes the place of evidence to show the plaintiff's possession, within twelve years before suit, of a property in which, from the nature of the thing, evidence of actual possession is impossible. MANO MOHUN GHOSH v. MOTHURA MOHUN ROY

306. Diluviation—Subordinate tenure—Suit for recovery of possession of land—Re-formation on the site of plaintiff's villages.—In a suit, brought by the plaintiffs on the 10th December 1888, for recovery of possession of three plots of land, on the allegation that the lands in dispute were re-formations on the site of the villages of K and M, which were let out in patni and darpatni to third parties in 1868; and that the rights of the patnidar and the dar-patnidar were re-acquired by them in the years 1878, 1880, 1883, and 1892, the defence was that the lands were not re-formation, but accretion to the defendant's village of C. Held that, as the plaintiff's title to, and possession of the villages of, H and M, down to the time of their diluviation, was not denied, and as it was found that the disputed plots of land were part of the said villages, it was not incumbent on the plaintiffs to prove possession of the lands in dispute previous to the diluviation, but the onus lay on the defendants to prove adverse possession for more than twelve years prior to the institution of the suit, and the suit was not barred by limitation. *Woomesh Chander Goopto v. 307. Accretion—Right of riparian proprietors—Title to alluvial land contested between villages on opposite banks—Prescription.—The plaintiffs were the proprietors of a village on the southern bank, who disputed with those of a village on the northern bank, the ownership of alluvial land formed by the Ganges. The current, after having encroached upon the southern bank, went away from that side of the river towards the northern, leaving the tract of alluvial land now in dispute. This appeared on its previous site to the south of the main stream. It was then carried away by diluvion, and again appeared after that. This land was claimed by the plaintiffs, not as part of their old land, but on the strength of their having held possession, adversely and without interruption, for more than twelve years before their dispossession by the defendants, by whom they alleged themselves to have been ousted within less than twelve years before they brought this suit. The evidence did not support their claim, the burden of proof being on them. It was shown that after the second recession of the river towards the north, and after the re-appearance of the alluvial land on the south of the current, the land had been taken by the Government into their possession, and that the latter had made over the greater part of it to the defendants who had since held this part. There had not been shown to have been any actual possession held of the remainder by the plaintiffs, who had thus failed as to the whole to prove the continued possession necessary to their acquiring title. UDIT NARAIN SINGH v. GOLABCHAND SAHU . I. L. R., 27 Cal., 221 [L. R., 26 I. A., 236]

308. — Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, arts. 142, 144—Boundaries, Dispute as to—Ownership of land reclaimed from a bhil contested between proprietors of contiguous estates—Prior possession of land by one of two claimants—Presumption as to continuance of possession of land by original owner, limitation being pleaded by party in possession.—In suits relating to disputed boundaries where the decision of the lower Court as to the ownership involves questions of the correctness of surveys, maps, recorded description, and other such evidence, the appellant should do more than show points requiring explanation. He should be prepared to show in what respect the decision has been wrong in regard to the evidence, and what other course would be right. The question was as to the ownership of land reclaimed from a bhil within the confines of one or other of two adjoining revenue mehals, the one belonging to the plaintiff, the other to the defendants, and involved the identification of the land in suit with some that had been covered with water, but of which the plaintiff's possession, with title, had been affirmed in proceedings of the revenue survey in 1857. In consequence of the nature and condition of the land, there was no evidence of any act of possession done by either party during the first two years of the twelve immediately preceding the date of the institution of the suit, and during the last ten years the defendants had been in possession. The latter, having tried and failed to establish adverse possession in themselves, contended that, even if the plaintiff's possession had been shown to have existed in 1857, he could not succeed without his showing that his possession remained till later than the 9th April 1869, the suit having been filed on 9th April 1881, or unless he proved some act of dispossession by the defendants within that period. Held that the presumption was in favour of the plaintiff's possession, which had been with apparent title, having in fact continued over the two years in question, as to which continuance there was no evidence to the contrary. If the burden was on the plaintiff to show possession down to within twelve years of suit, it had been discharged. RAJKUMAR ROY v. GOBIND CHUNDER ROY possession of certain lands in the bed of a river which had changed its course, and to get rid of the effect of a Deputy Magistrate's order under s. 318, Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, it was found that plaintiffs had been in possession when the lands were surveyed some years previously as part of their village, and had continued in possession up to the year in which the criminal proceeding was held. Held that the presumption raised by the plaintiff's continued, and undisturbed possession was not rebutted by defendant's allegation that he was entitled to the julkur of the river. HOGG v. 813. — Limitation—Suit on bond—Installment-bond—Indorsement of payment of instalments.—Where a defendant sets up the defence of limitation, he must plead it and show that the claim is barred. If, when the plaintiff has proved his case, the facts show that the cause of action accrued at a date earlier than the period of limitation, and the plea of limitation has been set up by the defendant, the latter will be entitled to take advantage of the plaintiff's evidence that the claim is barred, and to have judgment given in his favour. The obligee of a bond, by which the obligor covenanted to pay the sum of Rs. 800 by annual instalments of Rs. 200 and in which it was also agreed that payments of the instalments should be indorsed on the bond, brought a suit against the obligor alleging default in payment, and claiming to recover the amount of the bond. He gave credit for payment of the instalments for seven years, and alleged that his cause of action arose upon default in payment of the eighth instalment. The bond showed on its face indorsements of the payments for which credit was given. The obligor alleged that no instalments were paid after the third year, that therefore the debt became due at an earlier date than that stated by the plaintiff, and that the claim was barred by limitation. Held that, inasmuch as the defendant adduced no evidence to show that the later instalments were not paid, and inasmuch as the evidence produced by the plaintiff did not show that the debt accrued at a date earlier than the limitation period, the plea of limitation failed. RADHA PRASAD SINGH v. BHAJAN RAI . I. L. R., 7 All., 677

314. ——— Suit for possession by member of family admittedly not joint—Partition.—The plaintiff sued for possession of certain property, alleging that it had belonged to a joint family, of which he had been a member, and had been allotted to him on partition. The partition was not proved, and the suit was dismissed on the ground of limitation. On second appeal it was contended that, if the partition was held not to be proved, the family must be held to be joint; and as the possession of one member could not be adverse to another, the decree dismissing the suit on the ground of limitation was erroneous. Held that, as the family was admittedly not joint, the plaintiff was bound to remove the bar of limitation by showing some sort of possession by himself within twelve years before his suit could be entertained, and, as he had not done so, his suit was properly dismissed. TULSHI PRASAD v. II, arts. 127 and 144—Suit for possession of land alleging a previous partition.*—The defendant had purchased the land in question at a sale in execution of a decree obtained by him against cousins of the plaintiff. The plaintiff claimed to recover the land, alleging that it was his share of ancestral property which had been allotted to him on partition four or five years before suit, and of which he had actually been in separate possession. The lower Court upon these allegations rejected the plaintiff's claim, holding that the suit was not one for partition and did not fall within art. 127 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), but that art. 144 applied, and that the plaintiff had failed to show that the defendant's adverse possession had begun within twelve years preceding the suit. years' adverse possession by the defendant. In each case the plaintiff must plead his title; and if that title is in issue, he must make it out by at least prima facie evidence before the defendant can be put to proof of his defence. Where the defence is twelve years' adverse possession, the defendant must plead and make out the title he alleges, and thus show that the title of the plaintiff, which otherwise had been proved or admitted, was lost. In a suit for possession of land by redemption of mortgage, the very nature of which presupposes that the possession of the defendant or his predecessor was lawful, the plaintiff must in his plaint show the title upon which he relies, and therefore a title subsisting at the date of suit. Unless he gives prima facie evidence to show that his suit is within time, he fails to prove his title or subsisting right to the property. Philipps v. Philipps, L. R., 4 Q. B. to a question of fact, viz., whether the defendant's deceased father had, or had not, in his lifetime, in consideration of a payment to his order by the plaintiff, promised repayment. The High Court, reversing the decree of the first Court, had found that there had been no sufficient proof of the alleged transaction. This was the conclusion also on this appeal; and, although it was possible that the money might (as it was indicated in the judgment) have been wrongly obtained from the plaintiff by persons about him, it was not shown to have been received by the alleged borrower. LACHMI PRASAD v. 31. MORTGAGE.

321. ——— Suit for redemption of mortgage—Alleged sale.—In a suit for redemption of property which the plaintiff alleges to be mortgaged, but which the defendant contends was sold absolutely, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove the mortgage; and the existence of a mortgage cannot be presumed from the failure of the defendant to establish the alleged sale. BAKALI NABJI v. BABU DROZI [5 Bom., A. C., 159]

322. ——— Evidence Act, I of 1872, s. 110.—The plaintiff sued to redeem certain land, alleging that it had been mortgaged by his father to the defendant in 1854-55. The defendant denied the mortgage, and alleged that he purchased it under a deed of sale from the plaintiff's father in 1849, and had ever since been in his possession as owner. The deed of conveyance was not forthcoming, nor was the alleged mortgage-deed. The Court of first instance rejected the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the mortgage was not proved. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree of the Court of first instance. The defendant appealed. Held that the defendant's possession was prima facie evidence of a complete title, and that the plaintiff, who alleged that the defendant was merely a mortgagee, was bound to prove his own right as mortgagor, clearly and indefeasibly. Mere statements that the property had been mortgaged, which failed to establish any particular mortgage, did not shift the burden of proof, or require the mortgagee to show what were the terms of such mortgage, or his right to retain possession under it. RAMCHANDRA APAJI v. BALAJI BHARAV

323. ——— Lost mortgage-deed.—In a suit for redemption, the mortgage-deed, dated 21st July 1840, having been lost, the Judicial Commissioner held that the onus lay, not upon the mortgagor to prove that the term did not expire before 13th of February 1856, but upon the mortgagee to prove that it did. Held by the Privy Council that the burden of proof was prima facie on the mortgagor, regard being had, as respects the quantum of evidence required, to the opportunities which each party might naturally be supposed to have of living evidence. KISHEN DUTT RAM PANDAY v. NARENDAR BAHADOOR SINGH . . . I L R., 3 I. A., 85

324. ——— Beng. Reg. XVII of 1806—Promulgation of statute.—The plaintiff sued, on the 31st of December 1861, to redeem a mortgage of lands in Sarun, dated the 30th of November 1801. The mortgage-money was payable on the 28th September 1806. If not paid, the property was to vest absolutely in the mortgagee without foreclosure. The defendant admitted that he had not foreclosed, but stated that Regulation XVII of 1806 was promulgated in Sarun on the 7th January 1807, and consequently that the money became due before the Regulation was promulgated. Held the onus was on the plaintiff to prove that the Regulation was promulgated before 28th September 1806. SARIFUNNISA v. 326. ——— Profits.—In a suit for redemption, on the ground that the debt has been satisfied with interest, the onus is on the plaintiff. A mortgagee is not an insurer of the continuation of the same rate of profits as his mortgagor was able to raise. Hence an estimate of the rental preceding the mortgagor's possession is not sufficient proof of the profits in his time. SHAH MAKHANLAL v. SRI-KRISHNA SINGH

The defendants, admitting the proprietary title of the ancestor of the plaintiffs to the villages, alleged as to 10 biswas of each village that they were sold to their ancestors in 1842 by him for Rs. 1,250, and as to the other 10 biswas of each village, that they were subsequently mortgaged to their ancestors by him for Rs. 14,000, borrowed by him from them for the purpose of defending a suit arising out of the previous sale, which sum had not been satisfied from the usufruct. Held (STUART, C.J., dissenting) that the burden of proving the mortgage of the 10 biswas of each village of which the defendants alleged the sale lay on the plaintiffs. Per STUART, C.J., contra. RATAN KUAR v. 330. — Joint mortgage —Redemption by one mortgagor—Suit for other mortgagor for his share.—K and J jointly mortgaged 86 sihams or shares of an estate to C, giving him possession. C transferred his rights as mortgagee to T and M. In execution of a decree for money against K held by M, K's rights and interests in the mortgaged property were sold, and were purchased by P, whose heirs paid the entire mortgage-debt. R, an heir of J, sued the heirs of P to recover from them possession of J's sihams in the mortgaged property, on payment of a proportionate amount of the mortgage-money paid by P. The plaintiff alleged that the mortgage to C had been made forty years before suit. The defendants contended that a much longer period had expired since the date of the mortgage; that forty-one years had elapsed since C transferred his rights as mortgagee; that they had redeemed the property twenty-one years ago and had been since its redemption in proprietary and adverse possession of the sihams in suit; and that the suit was barred by limitation. Neither party was aware of the date of the mortgage, and neither adduced any proof on the point. Held that the defendants being admittedly in possession, though the existence of a mortgage as the origin of their possession was conceded by them, it lay upon the plaintiff to give prima facie proof of the subsistence of that mortgage at the date of suit; but that, assuming that notice was given to the defendants by the plaintiff to produce the mortgage-deed, and that they failed to do so, very slight evidence would have been sufficient to satisfy the obligation which lay on the plaintiff. Kishen Dutt Ram Pandey v. 330. — Sale of land in execution of decrees—Suit by third party to recover.—In a suit to redeem certain land demised on kanam in 1850 by A to the predecessor of B, C, who was in possession of the land, was made a defendant. A proved his title to the land and possession up to 1850. C pleaded title to the land, and denied that B had ever been in possession. Both pleas were found to be false. It was found, however, that C had been in possession from 1869 to 1885, and that in 1876 the land had been sold in execution of a decree against C (to which A was not a party) and purchased by D, who re-sold to C in 1879. The lower Court held that C's possession must be taken to have been derived from B, till the contrary was proved. Held that the burden of proving that his possession was not derived from B lay upon C. NILAKANDAN v. After a time, the mortgagor tendered the amount of the principal sum and forcibly took possession of the property. The mortgagees sued to recover possession and obtained a decree with wasilat. Held that the plaintiff might have sued under Act XIV of 18-9, s. 15; but that, suing as he did, the onus was on him to produce the accounts and show that something was due to him as interest. FRANKISHORE v. The defence was that the mortgage falling within the provisions of s. 240 of the Act was void as against the attaching creditor and those claiming under him. For the mortgagee it was contended that the attachment could not prevail, it not having been proved affirmatively that the requirements of s. 239 relating to the intimation of the attachment had been complied with. Held that this objection to the validity of the attachment could not be raised for the first time on this appeal, even if it was not rather for the mortgagee, seeking to deprive the attaching creditor of his possession, to prove the non-observance of the formalities in question. RAMKRISHNA DASS SURBOWJI v. By arrangement between A and C a partition of the lands was made, and each party collected the rents of the lands allotted to him. Forty years afterwards, a butwara of the mouzah was made by the Collector between A and B, whereby lands held by C under the previous arrangement were allotted to A. C was no party to the butwara proceedings. In a suit brought by A against C for possession of the lands so allotted, the plaintiff alleged that the previous division of the lands between A and C was a temporary one, made after the commencement of the butwara proceedings. 354. ———— Title—S & it after ejectment.—The plaintiff, a lessee in perpetuity of a piece of land from the inamdar of the village in which it was situated, sued the defendant, who had dispossessed him more than six months before the date of suit, to eject him from the land. The defendant set up a lease from the same inamdar, but it was held to have been granted without any authority. Both the leases required to be registered under Act XX of 1866, but were not registered. Held that the plaintiff, although suing more than six months after the date of dispossession and without resorting to a possessory suit (Act XIV of 1859, s. 15; Act I of 1877, s. 9), was entitled to rely on the possession previous to his dispossession as against a person who had no title; the onus being on defendant to prove his title. *KRISHNARAY YASHVANT v. 362. ———— Obstruction to execution of decree by a claimant—Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 229 (Acts X of 1877 and XIV of 1882, s. 331).—In a suit under s. 229 of Act VIII of 1859 (s. 331 of Acts X of 1877 and XIV of 1882), the onus is on the plaintiff to establish a prima facie case of possession, and it is then incumbent on the claimant to answer that case, and show, if possible, a better title. *RAKHAI CHURN MURDUL v. (Act XIV of 1882), which was duly registered as a suit. The lower Court found as a fact that the plaintiff through his tenant B had been in possession of the land. The defendants pleaded that the land had belonged not to the plaintiff, but to one J, on whose death they were entitled to it. Held that in a proceeding under s. 331 of the Civil Procedure Code, where possession is shown to have been with the plaintiff, the defendants are not, without showing title in themselves, at liberty to impeach the plaintiff's title, or to set up a ius tertii. The onus of proving a better title than the plaintiff's rests with them, and they may prove their title as a defence. BAPUJIRAO v. FATTESING SHARAJI BROSHE

364. ———— Proof of title—Unregistered deed of sale—Oral evidence inadmissible.—On the 18th January 1876 plaintiff became a purchaser at a Court's sale of the right, title, and interest of G and N in a shop, and, having been obstructed by defendant in obtaining possession of it, sued to recover it from him. The plaint was filed on the 27th January 1877. Defendant answered that he purchased it from G under a deed of sale dated 5th January 1865, and that he had been in possession since that day. The deed of sale was not admitted in evidence for want of registration, but it was found that defendant had been in possession as owner since 5th January 1865. Held that, as the defendant admitted that he had derived his title from G (of whose interest in the shop the plaintiff was assignee), the burden of proof lay upon the defendant, and that he had failed to prove his purchase, inasmuch as his unregistered deed of sale could not be received in evidence, and oral evidence was inadmissible in place of the deed. *SAMBHUBHAI KARSANDAS v. 368. ———— Suit to establish title—Bom. Reg. XVII of 1927, s. 7, cls. 1 and 2—Bom. Act I of 1865—Miras land.—On the 28th August 1857 the plaintiff passed a kabuliat to Government and took possession of certain miras land, abandoned by the mirasdar for four or five years previous to that date. The plaintiff continued in possession of his land, and paid the Government assessment from 1864 till 1872. In an action brought by the plaintiff to recover possession of the land, he alleged in the plaint that he had taken the defendants as partners in the cultivation of the land, and had been dispossessed by them. Both the lower Courts rejected the claim. The lower Appellate Court based its decision on the ground that, as the plaintiff failed to prove the fact of his alleged partnership with the defendants, he could not succeed, notwithstanding that Court found in the plaintiff's favour the other facts stated above. Held on special appeal that, as the suit was one to establish title and recover possession, the Judge should, on the facts found and having regard to Regulation XVII of 1827, s. 7, cls. 1 and 2, and Bombay Act I of 1865, have called upon the defendants to prove their claim to hold possession as against the plaintiff's right of occupation. *TRIMBAK RANU v. 369. ———— Title.—In a suit to recover possession of land and waailat under a ganti jumma, which had originally belonged to the defendants, the main question was as to ten cottahs, of which possession by receipt of rent only was claimed from the defendants, whose dwelling-house was thereon. The defendants alleged that the ten cottahs were not included in the ganti jumma, under which plaintiffs claimed. Held that the onus was on the plaintiffs to prove that the ten cottahs were included in the ganti jumma under which they claimed. It was not on the defendants to show the extent of that tenure while it was in their possession and when it was transferred to the plaintiffs, although the fact was one peculiarly within their knowledge. *GIRDHAR HARI v. 371. — Suit for lands granted as jaghir tenure—Non-production of documentary evidence.—In a suit to recover possession of certain lands upon the ground that they were granted as a jaghir tenure by the plaintiff's ancestor to one P and his lineal descendants, and that such descendants had failed,—Held that it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove the grant alleged in his plaint, without which no cause of action would have been shown; and as the tenure was created in the proper and usual manner,—i.e., by pottah and kabuliat,—the latter would be in the possession of the plaintiff's ancestors. As this was not produced, no secondary evidence given of it, and no foundation laid for giving such evidence, it was unnecessary to go further into the plaintiff's case. JUGGERNATH SAHEE v. ALHAD KOWUR. 19 W. R., 140

372. — Proof of title.—The plaintiff sued for possession under the allegation that the property in dispute was under the management of the defendant. But the District Judge, on appeal, considering that the plaintiff had failed to prove his donors' title to the land, reversed the Munsif's decree. Held that the Judge was in error in requiring the plaintiff to establish the title of the donors, without enquiring whether the defendant had obtained possession merely by their permission; and that the suit must be remanded for a finding by the District Judge on that point. *SAKALCHAND SAVAI-CHAND v. In such circumstances,—Held by the Judicial Committee, reversing the decree of the Court at Calcutta (without prejudice, however, to any question which might arise between A and any other party claiming under B), that it was incumbent on C and D to prove some title to the lands claimed before they could put A to proof of his title. *RAM RUTTON RAY v. was sold in execution and bought by P, the defendant. N then brought his suit against P (the purchaser) to establish his title. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. On appeal, the District Judge reversed that decree, holding that the plaintiff had been in possession of the shop and had proved his title. The defendant appealed to the High Court. Held that, the plaintiff having proved his possession at the date of the execution sale, it lay upon the defendant (P), who claimed the property, to prove a title in himself or in the judgment-debtor A, and that, he having failed to do this, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree declaratory of his right to the property as against the defendant. Where a dispossessed party proceeds, under s. 230 of Act VIII of 1859, to vindicate the possession of which he has been deprived, although he may give evidence of his title, he is not bound to do so, but may rest his right to recover on his possession, and cast upon the decree-holder the burden of proving his title, i.e., his right to dispossess the applicant. Per West, J.—A person in possession of property which is sold in execution as that of another is not called upon, when suing to establish his title, to prove his proprietorship as by an action in rem against all the world. It is enough if he establishes a good title as against the judgment-debtor whose right has been sold; and as he is in possession, that possession in itself affords a ground for an assertion of full proprietorship for the purpose of the suit, except so far as the right vested in the judgment-debtor can be shown affirmatively to contradict or qualify it. Possession constitutes an interest requiring affirmative proof of a superior title on the part of any one who seeks to disturb it, and therefore, where a person in possession of property which has been sold in execution as being the property of another sues to establish his title to such property, the burden of proof lies, not upon him, but upon the person who claims as purchaser at the execution-sale. PEMRAJ BRAVANNIRAH v. 387. ————— Right to begin—Adoption, Proof of—Proof of loss, and admission of secondary evidence, of a document alleged to have been executed—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 65.—A suit for possession by right of inheritance was brought by a claimant, alleging himself to be the heir, against the alleged adopted son of the last male owner, denying that an adoption purporting to be made by the widow had been duly authorized by the deceased. The Court of first instance called upon the defendant to prove his title as a son by adoption, notwithstanding that the plaintiff was out of possession, and could not have succeeded, in the event of the defendant's failure to prove it, without first proving his own title as collateral heir by descent: thus in effect, proposing to make the establishment of the plaintiff's title depend upon the failure or success of the defendant in proving the adoption. The High Court pointed out the error of this proceeding, and the Judicial Committee affirmed its judgment, concurring also in its finding that the adoption had been proved. It was found also that the loss of the anumati-patra had been established, so that secondary evidence of it was receivable. *KALI KISHORE DUTT GUPTA MOZUMDAR v. 388. ————— Presumption of ownership—Possession—Suit for ejectment—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 110.—It is usually for the plaintiff who seeks ejectment to prove his title. But where he proves himself to have peaceably enjoyed possession for a considerable time, the person who has recently dispossessed him has to meet the presumption of law that the plaintiff's possession indicates his ownership. In a suit for possession of immoveable property and other reliefs, it was proved that the plaintiff and his predecessors in title had been in undisturbed possession for thirty or forty years previous to his dispossession by the defendant. The defendant alleged, but failed to prove, that the plaintiff had paid him rent as tenant-at-will of the premises. The lower Appellate Court, upon the finding that the plaintiff's possession was that of a licensee, modified the first Court's decree, which had allowed the claim in full. Held (by MAHMOOD, J.) with reference to s. 110 of the Evidence Act that, although in the first instance the burden of proving his title was on the plaintiff, it was shifted by his proving long undisturbed possession; that the defendant's failure to prove the alleged payment of rent went far to prove that the plaintiff's possession was adverse; and that the Court below, in acting upon the theory that such possession was that of a licensee, had wrongly set up for the defendant a defence which he had not set up for himself. *LACHHO v. 392. ————— Purchase money—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 106.—In a suit to enforce the right of pre-emption, in which the plaintiff impugns the correctness of the price stated in the instrument of sale, although the burden of proof prima facie is on him to show that the property has in fact been sold below the stated price, yet very slight evidence is ordinarily sufficient to establish his case; and when such case is established, it rests upon the defendants, the vendor and vendee, to prove by cogent evidence that the stated price is the correct one. The principle laid down by the Privy Council in Kishen Dutt Ram Panday v. Narendar Bahadoor Singh, L. R., 3 I. A., 85, applied. *Mahomed Nooral Hossein v. Hyder Bukkh, W. In determining the amount of the price which a pre-emptor has to pay, the Court is not called upon to assess the amount which would be a fair and reasonable price for the property, but to ascertain what amount actually changed hands as consideration for the sale. *TAWKEUL RAI v. price stated in the deed of sale to be fictitious must give some prima facie evidence leading to the presumption that the price so stated was not the true price. Having done that, it then lies upon the vendor and vendee to give such an explanation by evidence as will go to rebut the presumption raised by the plaintiff's evidence. In the majority of cases, the only prima facie evidence which the plaintiff pre-emptor could produce would be either evidence showing that the vendor or the vendee had made an admission that the price was fictitious, or else evidence showing that the market value of the property was so much less than the alleged price as would lead any reasonable man to come to the conclusion that the alleged price was not the real price. Where the price stated in the deed of sale was nearly five times the market value of the property sold, and the purchaser gave no explanation showing why he was willing to buy the property at a price apparently so extravagant,—Held that there was sufficient evidence upon which to find that the price alleged in the contract was fictitious. *Bhagwan Singh v. 36. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

395. ——— Evidence as to liability of agent to account.—In 1884 a deed of release exonerating an agent from liability to account was executed by his principal, stating that there had been a settlement between them. In 1885 the agent signed an ikrarnama addressed to the principal, stating that there had not been a settlement of accounts, and that he was willing to account from the day of his appointment to date. Subsequently, having resigned his employment, the agent brought a suit to have the latter document set aside, but that suit was dismissed. In a suit brought by the principal, the release of 1884, and its contents, were proved to the satisfaction of both the Courts below, which dismissed the suit on that ground, although the ikrarnama of 1885 appeared to them, in fact, to have been made. Upon the plaintiff's appeal, it was contended that the onus was on the defendant to explain his execution of the ikrarnama. Held that, inasmuch as it had been found by two Courts concurrently that the release of 1884 was valid, and that it necessarily followed from that finding that the document of 1885, so far as it expressed the agent's willingness to account, was false, the onus was as much upon the principal to explain his reception of the ikrarnama of 1885 as upon the agent to explain its execution. The question as to the burden of proof had therefore been rendered immaterial by the facts proved. On the materials before them the Courts below had rightly decided in favour of the defendant. NILMOHI SINGH DEO v. KIRTI CHUNDER CHOWDREY [I. L. R., 20 Cal., 847 I. R., 20 I. A., 95 consequence of defendant's negligence or misconduct—Jamabandi—Act XII of 1867 (N.-W. P. Rent Act), ss. 93 (h), 209—Act I of 1872 (Evidence Act), s. 106.—In a suit under s. 93 (h) of the N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1867), by a recorded co-sharer against a lambardar for his recorded share of the profits of a mehal, in which the plaintiff seeks to make the defendant liable under s. 209, not only for the profits which the latter has actually collected, but for those which through gross negligence or misconduct he has omitted to collect, the burden of proving such negligence or misconduct rests in the first instance on the plaintiff. No general rule can be laid down as to the quantum of evidence which the plaintiff in such a case must give in order to shift the burden of proof on to the defendant. The mere production by the plaintiff of the jamabandi or rent-roll is not sufficient to cast upon the defendant the necessity of proving that there was no negligence or misconduct in him. S. 106 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) does not apply to such a case. So held by the Full Bench, MAHMOOD, J., dissenting. Held, by MAHMOOD, J., contra, that the production of the jamabandi by the plaintiff in a case where he claims his share of the profits according to the jamabandi and the lambardar-defendant pleads that the actual collections fell short of the jamabandi, established a prima facie presumption in favour of the plaintiff so as to throw upon the defendant, with reference to s. 106 of the Evidence Act, the necessity of proving circumstances which rendered it impossible for him to collect the profits according to the jamabandi. *MUHAMMAD INAYAT HUSAIN v. In a suit for resumption on the allegation that the defendants were in possession of a portion of the lands as invalid lakhiraj by withholding payment of the māl rent thereof from after 1793, the defence was that the lands in dispute were valid rent-free lands existing as such from before 1790. Held that, on the grounds of the decision of the Privy Council in Harihar Mukhopadhyaya v. Madab Chandra Babu, 8 B. L. If the lakhirajdar claims under a grant subsequent to that date, the zamindar is not entitled to a decree until he has shown in the first instance that the land claimed is part of his zamindari and at one time was māl land. And in the latter case, the lakhirajdar is not put to proof of his title until the zamindar has established the fact of the land having once, at some time subsequent to 1st December 1790, been rent-paying land. *MAHOMED AKHIE v. 405. ———— Declaration of lakhiraj title—Assessment of rent.—In a suit instituted in 1877, A prayed for a declaration that he had a lakhiraj title to certain lands, the defendant stated that; the lands, for a declaration of a title to which A now sued, formed part of certain lands which had been the subject of resumption proceedings, which were terminated in 1863 by a decree declaring that the lands which were the subject of that suit, including the lands now claimed by A, were not lakhiraj. It being found as a fact that A had neither been a party to, nor been represented in, the resumption proceedings; that he had been in quiet and undisturbed possession of the lands which he now claimed for more than twelve years before the institution of his suit; and that proceedings had been taken by the defendant calculated to disturb such possession,—Held that, although the onus of proof lay on the plaintiff, it was not necessary for him to prove that the lands claimed by him to be held as lakhiraj had been held rent-free from before the date of the permanent settlement; but it was sufficient for him to prove that the defendant was, at the time of the institution of the suit, debarred by lapse of time from instituting a suit for the resumption or assessment of rent upon the land. *ABHOY CHURN PAL v. —Rent-free lands —Landlord and tenant.—In suits for the resumption of lands alleged by the defendant to be lakhiraj, the burden of proof is in the first instance on the plaintiff to show that the lands are mâl. The fact that the defendant is a tenant of the plaintiff's is a matter to be taken into consideration by the Court in determining whether, on the facts of the case, the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case; but unless the Court finds that the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case, judgment should be given for the defendant. *Harihar Mukhopadhyaya v. The general presumption is in favour of the liability to assessment of land, and by Bengal Regulations XIX of 1793 and XIV of 1825 the onus probandi lies on a claimant to lakhiraj to establish his title to exemption,—not by inference, but by positive proof of a grant to hold as lakhiraj, or by a proprietary right, prior to the grant of the Dewanny (12th August 1765); and that the possession was bona fide taken under it, or an enjoyment of lands as such, and descendible to heirs at or since that time. *DHEERAJ RAJA MAHATAB CHUND BAHADOOR v. —Beng. Reg. XLI of 1795, s. 10.—Where certain land apparently lakhiraj was represented in village papers as part of māl land, and included within the boundary of the revenue-paying mehal,—Held, on the zamindar's suit for assessment of the land, that the onus of showing that the case is within s. 10, Regulation XLI of 1795, lay on the zamindar. The inclusion of the land in the boundary is not conclusive evidence, nor is it binding when the boundary has not been made judicially. The landlord proving it to be so, the plaintiff claiming rent-free possession would be required to prove his rent-free possession (peaceably and not tainted with fraud) for sixty years before he can get a decree. 422. ———— Suit for land as lakhiraj—Dispute as to land being māl or lakhiraj.—In a suit in which plaintiff claimed four plots of land as belonging to his patni, and defendant alleged that they formed part of the resumed land of a jote for which he had obtained a decree in a resumption suit, and of which he had ever since been in possession, the parties went to trial on the issue whether the land was māl as beyond the limits of the decree, or lakhiraj as included in the chittahs, according to which possession was given to the defendant in execution. On a consideration of what the latter had received under the decree, the first Court held that he was not entitled to retain the disputed land. The Appellate Court did not look beyond the plaintiff's chittahs. Held that the circumstances justified the first Court in deviating somewhat from the usual rule of law as regards the onus probandi, and that the course taken by it was most consonant with justice. in a talukh sold at a revenue sale under Act XI of 1859 fall under any of the exceptions to s. 37 of that Act is on the person alleging the under-tenures to be within such exceptions. RASH BEHARI BOSU v. HARA MOMI DEBYA . I. L. R., 15 Calc., 555

444. — Act XI of 1859, s. 37—Incumbrance, Annulment of—Burden of proof—Tenure held since permanent settlement.—In a suit for ejectment by a purchaser at a revenue sale, the defence was that the defendants held the land as a subordinate talukh, which had been in existence and in their possession and that of their predecessors since the time of the permanent settlement. It was found as a fact that the tenure was in existence in the year 1798-99. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed, and he now contended that the facts found could not protect the tenure in the absence of proof that the tenure was in existence at the date of the permanent settlement. Held that, although in the first instance the burden of proof is upon the defendants, the fact that defendants were in possession for such a length of time was sufficient to discharge the onus and establish that the tenure was protected. That in a case like this no hard-and-fast rule can be laid down as to when the burden of proof shifts from one side to the other, and that each case must be governed by its merits. *NITYANUND ROY v. 445. — Ejectment, Suit for—Avoidance of under-tenure—Incumbrance—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, ss. 59, 60, 66.—In a suit by the purchaser of an under-tenure, under ss. 59 and 60 of the Rent Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1869), to obtain possession of lands held by the defendant, on the ground that the holdings are incumbrances which have accrued thereon by an authorized act of the previous holder of the under-tenure, it lies upon the plaintiff to show that the defendant's holdings are such incumbrances as the plaintiff is entitled to avoid under s. 66 of the Rent Act. GOBIND NATH SHAHA CHOWHURI v. REILLY . I. L. R., 13 Calc., 1

446. — Suit to set aside patni sale—Irregularity—Non-service of notice—Proof of service—Evidence Act, s. 106.—In a suit against a zamindar to set aside the sale of a patni tenure under Regulation VIII of 1819 on the ground of non-service of notice, the onus of proving service lies on the defendant according to the spirit of s. 106 of the Evidence Act. *DOORGA CHURN SURMA CHOWDERY v. 448. ———— Fraud, Proof of—Irregularity.—In a suit to set aside an execution sale on the ground of fraud, the onus probandi rests on the plaintiff to prove his allegation; mere irregularity in the issue of processes will not of itself prove fraud, even where the auction-bids were so small as to excite suspicion. KUBBERUN v. SUPERHUN 24 W. R., 388

449. ———— Proof of irregularity—Non-affixing of notices previous to sale.—Several years after the purchase by the defendant of immoveable property at a sale in execution of a decree, the judgment-debtor sued this purchaser for the lands on the ground, amongst others, that the notices required by Bengal Regulation XX of 1795, s. 12, had not been affixed previous to the sale. Held that the onus of proving the default in affixing the notices lay upon the plaintiff, the judgment-debtor. 5 W. R., P. C., 7: 9 Moore's I. A., 324]

450. ———— Allegation of fraud—Knowledge of fraud.—In a suit to set aside a sale in execution of decree on the ground of fraud, where the plaintiff alleges the fraud only came to his knowledge at a certain time,—Held that the burden of proving such knowledge on the part of the plaintiff, prior to the time stated by them, lay on the defendants. NATHA SINGH v. JODHA SINGH
[I. L. R., 6 All., 408]

451. ———— Bond fides.—In execution of a decree, the judgment-debtor's right title, and interest in a certain property were attached. The plaintiff thereupon preferred a claim under conveyances from the judgment-debtor; but it was rejected, and the property was sold. The judgment-creditor purchased the same at the auction and sold it to the defendant, who ousted the plaintiff, who thereupon sued to recover possession under his conveyance. Held that the onus was not entirely on the plaintiff to prove the bond fides of the sale, but that the evidence adduced by the defendant should be examined also. 452. ———— Purchase by granddaughter from grandmother—Stranger purchasing bond fide—Proof of bond fides.—When a granddaughter purchases from a grandmother, and attempts to oust a stranger who purchased bond fide and without notice, full and satisfactory proof of the bond fides of the transaction is necessary, even though no motive for fraud is proved. that it was not bond fide, but collusive, the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff, and it is not sufficient for him only to show circumstances which create a suspicion of the bond fides of the transaction. But in a suit for possession of land and for a declaration of plaintiff's title by virtue of purchase, it is not sufficient for him to produce a deed executed by a judgment-debtor: the plaintiff must free his case of such suspicions as may arise from his own position with reference to the vendor, and from any such circumstance as the improbability of such a purchase having been made. 45. SERVICE OF SUMMONS.

455. ———— Application to set aside ex-parte decree—Proof of service of summons.—Where a judgment-debtor applies to set aside an ex-parte judgment on the ground that there was no effectual service of summons upon him, he should be called upon to give his evidence or to make out a prima facie case. 46. TRUST, REVOCATION OF.

456. ———— Religious endowment—Proof of revocation—Limitation.—In 1813 certain lands were dedicated by deed to the religious service of an idol, and in 1820 that dedication was confirmed in a partition-deed. The plaintiff sued to set aside alienations of the property and to have the trusts of the dedication-deeds declared. The holders of the property alleged that a subsequent partition-deed had been executed in 1845, and that the dealings of the family had shown an intention to revoke the trusts. Held that it lay upon the holders to prove the revocation of the trusts, and that, on failure to do so, they could not set up the law of limitation in answer to the plaintiff's suit. 48. WITNESS.

458. ——— Refusal to come into Court as witness—Presumption.—In a suit to recover possession of land claimed by virtue of a sanad from a rajah, in which plaintiff gave prima facie evidence of the authenticity of the sanad and subpoenaed the rajah to prove it, it was held that the lower Court did very right in considering the plaintiff's testimony to be strengthened by defendant's (rajah's) refusal to come into Court with his own story; and that the onus lay on the rajah to rebut the plaintiff's evidence, or to prove minority or other personal disqualification. *RADHA KISTO SING DEO v. 49. WRONGFUL CONVERSION.

459. ——— Suit for wrongful conversion of timber—Failure to prove actual or constructive possession.—In a suit under the Civil Procedure Code, in which the plaintiffs allege that the defendants wrongfully and forcibly took away and were detaining timber which had been in the plaintiffs' constructive possession, and to which they are entitled, and the relief asked for is the restitution of the timber with costs of suit, if it be proved that the defendants had forcibly and wrongfully taken property in the plaintiffs' actual or constructive possession, it would then be for the defendants to show that they were entitled to the timber. In the present case, the plaintiffs having failed to show their possession of the timber or the forcible or wrongful dis-possession or conversion of the goods, and the defendants having made good their title to the timber,—Held that the judgment should have been for the defendants. *SNADDEN v. 50. MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

460. ——— Suit by purchaser of tora garas huk—Evidence of alienability.—Suit by the purchaser of a certain annual payment by Government, called tora garas huk, sold in satisfaction of a decree. Held that the onus was on the Government to prove that there was something in the nature of this payment which made it incapable of alienation, and that the Government had failed to give such proof. *SHUMBHOO LALL GIRDHUR LALL v. through the land of the plaintiff, and for opening an old road which had been closed by the defendants,—Held that the only question which can be tried in the suit is, whether the defendants have trespassed on the land of the plaintiff by opening a road. The onus is upon the plaintiff to prove that the land belongs to him. HIRA CHAND BANERJEE v. SHAMA CHARAN CHATTERJEE

462. ——— Admission of assets by heir of deceased judgment-debtor—Proof of extent of property.—When an heir of a deceased judgment-debtor admits possession of some of the latter's property, the onus is on the heir, and not on the decree-holder, to prove the extent of that property. *MATUNGINEE DEBEA v. 2 W. R., Mis., 41

463. ——— Suit for share of income-tax—Manager, Possession as.—Suit for share of income-tax by a co-sharer who, the lower Court found, was the defendant's manager. Held that the mere production of a deed showing that the defendant had in it nominated other persons to collect the rents of her share, without proof of cessation of possession, did not shift the onus from the plaintiff of proving that he had ceased to hold possession of the defendant's share as her manager, or that the defendant, and not the plaintiff, had actually collected the rents. RAMNATH GHOSH v. AMRIT MOYEE DOSSEE

[5 W. R., 168]

464. ——— Suit for disturbance of kazi in his office—Proof of legality of his appointment as kazi.—Where it was shown that the plaintiffs had acted as kazi of Bombay for more than twenty years, it was held, in an action against the defendant for disturbing the plaintiff in his office and thereby depriving him of his fees, that the onus was on the defendant to show that the plaintiff had been illegally appointed; and on the defendant failing to show that, that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. *MUHAMMAD YUSSUB v. 465. ——— Suit for share of joint property under family arrangement—Proof of cause of action.—A plaintiff suing for a share of joint property which she claimed under a family arrangement said to have been reduced to writing as an ikrarnamah, and upon the happening of the necessary conditions, it was held that the rules with regard to the onus of proof which are applicable to a suit for a share of joint family property were not directly applicable, and the plaintiff was bound to give some prima facie proof of her cause of action. *RAM CHUNDER MITTER v. shareholder) in respect of the occupation of a certain quantity of the serait land which constituted the holding of the combined shareholders, and the defendant objected that the plaintiff's share was less than what he stated it to be,—Held that the burden of proving the extent of his share lay on the plaintiff. In such a case even a raiyat resisting the claim of a shareholder to rent would be entitled, if he had good reason to do so, to make the plaintiff prove the amount of his share; and the only onus on an intervenor would be to prove bond fide possession. A decision set aside by a superior Court as made without jurisdiction cannot have any probative force whatever between the parties. SOOKHAM MISSEER v. CROWDY 19 W. R., 285

Act II of 1876—Bengal Excise Act, VII of 1878—Liability of master for servant's breach of license.*—A, who held a certificate under Act VII of 1878 (the Excise Act) from the Deputy Commissioner of Police that he was entitled to a license from the Collector to sell muddut upon the conditions set forth therein, obtained such a license from the Collector under Act I of 1878 (The Opium Act) upon the conditions mentioned. No license was granted by the Deputy Commissioner of Police, it not being usual for licenses to be granted by the police where a license had been issued by the Collector upon a certificate from the Deputy Commissioner. A was charged under s. 40 of Act IV of 1866 [as amended by Bengal Act II of 1876] with a breach of the conditions, not of the license, but of the certificate, the act complained of having been committed by A's servant. Held that the sale of muddut is regulated by Act I of 1878, and therefore no license from the Commissioner of Police for the sale of muddut was requisite under ss. 36 and 37 of Act IV of 1866. Held further that s. 39 of Act IV of 1866 applied to the case, and that under that section a license from the Deputy Commissioner of Police was necessary for the sale of muddut, and accordingly that A, although he had obtained a certificate from the Deputy Commissioner of Police entitling him to a license under Act I of 1878, was liable to punishment by reason of his not having, under s. 39 of Act IV of 1866, also obtained a certificate from the Deputy Commissioner. —S. 5 of the Opium Act (I of 1878) declares that the Local Government, with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council, may make rules consistent with the Act regulating the sale of opium. Under this section, rules were issued by the Government of Bengal with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council on the 21st February 1898, rule 15 (1) of which declares that a person to whom a license has been granted may sell opium by retail in accordance with the conditions specified in the license. The conditions of the license for retail sale of opium are contained in Form No. 1 made under rule 15. Under art. 13 of this form, the holder of the license is to keep a daily correct account showing the quantity of opium received and sold, and other details. Art. 18 sets out that on infringement of any of the conditions contained in the form or imposed by the Opium Act the license may be cancelled. The petitioner, a licensed vendor of opium, was convicted of having kept incorrect accounts in contravention of the rules made under s. 5 of the Opium Act, and having thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 9 of that Act. He was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs200, and in default of payment to undergo rigorous imprisonment for four months. Held that the conviction and sentence must be set aside, there being nothing in any of the rules made under s. 5 of the Act which would make the preparation of an incorrect account punishable under s. 9. UMESH CHUNDER GHOSH v. 2. ———— Act XIII of 1857—Wrongful entrance and illegal search, Liability of police officer for—Code of Criminal Procedure (1882), ss. 155, 156, and 165—Non-cognizable offence.—An offence under s. 9 of the Opium Act (I of 1878), and not coming under s. 14 of that Act, is a non-cognizable offence, and is therefore one for which, by s. 4 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a police officer cannot arrest without warrant; and he has therefore, under s. 155 of the Code, no authority to investigate such an offence without the order of a Magistrate; nor under s. 165 can he make a search in respect of it. The power of arrest without warrant referred to in cl. (g) of s. 4 of the Criminal Procedure Code is an unqualified power, and not a conditional power, as in s. 24 of Act XIII of 1857, which only gives the right to a police officer to arrest without warrant in case the accused does not furnish the security required by that section. Where a police officer therefore, in respect of an offence under s. 9 of the Opium Act not coming under s. 14 of the Act, made a search in the house of the accused without an order of a Magistrate,—Held that his action could not be justified, either under s. 24 of Act XIII of 1857 or under the Code of Criminal Procedure, and that he was liable in an action for damages for the illegal search. BAHABAL SHAW v. A talukhdari sanad was granted to J S, and he was subsequently registered as talukhdar under the provisions of Act I of 1869. In a suit against J S by persons alleging themselves to be joint in family and estate with him, to have their interest in the talukh declared, held by the Commissioner of Seetapore in Oudh, confirming the decision of the settlement officer, that, under Act I of 1869, the defendant was protected by his sanad against any claim of the plaintiffs in respect of the talukh. Held by the Privy Council, on appeal, that as a person who has been registered as a talukhdar under Act I of 1869, and has thereby acquired a talukhdari right in the whole property, may nevertheless have made himself a trustee of a portion of the beneficial interest in lands comprised within the talukh for another, and be liable to account accordingly, the suit must be remanded for trial as to whether the defendant had agreed, or become bound, to hold the villages comprised in the summary settlement and sanad, or the rents and profits thereof, in trust for the plaintiffs. HARDEO BUX v. JAWAHIR SINGH

[I. L. R., 3 Calc., 522: I. A., 4 I. A., 178]

Held by the Privy Council after remand that Act I of 1869, which was passed before the suit was decided by the Court of first instance, did not operate so as to change the relative conditions of the parties, and to put an end to the trust upon which the defendant had previously held the estate. The estate in his hands remained thereafter subject to the trust, and there can be no difference in this respect between an express trust and a trust implied or presumed from a fair and reasonable interpretation of the acts and declarations of the defendant. *HARDEO BUX v. 112, and Hardeo Baksh v. Jowahir Singh, L. R., 6 I. A., 161, were decided, is not applicable to make the talukhdar hold subject to a charge for the benefit of such other person. The talukhdar in whom no such trust is vested is entitled to the proprietary right in the lands forming the talukhdari estate comprised in the sanad. A claim against the talukhdar for the proprietary right included lands in which the claimant alleged himself to have purchased under proprietary rights which were not claimed. A decree maintaining the talukhdar's proprietary right was made without prejudice to a claim for the under-proprietary rights. HAIDAR ALI KHAN v. NAWAB ALI KHAN. I. L. R., 17 Calc., 311 [L. 5. — Talukhdars—Title obtained by talukhdar under his sanad—Effect of confiscation of 1858 upon previous gift—Attempt to establish trust for claimants as to part of talukhdari estate—Claim to sub-proprietary right distinguished.—The sanad granting a talukhdar's estate confers primò facie an absolute title upon the grantee. A gift of villages by a talukhdar to collateral relations, if effectively made in 1850, and whether absolute or only for the maintenance of the donees out of the rents and profits, was rendered, by the effect of the confiscation of 1858, inoperative after that event to establish an interest as against the talukhdar holding under a sanad comprising the villages. Where a claim was based upon the principle that the conduct of a sanad-holding talukhdar and of his predecessor had been sufficient to establish against him a liability to make good, out of his talukh, interests, as to which ground was supposed to have been given for his relations to claim,—Held that such a claim was not established merely by the claimants having been left in possession of villages, and having paid to the talukhdar only the proportion of the revenue assessed upon them, during the whole time of the troubles in Oudh, and afterwards. Held also that the question of the claimants having an under-proprietary right in such villages was entirely irrelevant to a claim for a declaration that they had proprietary right therein, on which latter title they sought to found a right to have their names entered in the settlement record; and held that, although there are cases in which the claimant of a proprietary right may be allowed to maintain on the same facts, that he is an under-proprietor, this claim was not one of them. *RAM SINGH v. 6. — Estate of a sanad-holding talukhdar—Lineal primogeniture by custom—Award of a body of talukhdar within s. 33 of Oudh Estates' Act—Withdrawal of a voluntary admission.—The title to a talukhdari estate devolving upon a single heir by a custom of lineal primogeniture was contested. The plaintiff claimed to succeed his deceased brother as talukhdar. The defendant, who was his paternal uncle, was in possession. Before the annexation of the province, the kabulist had been taken in the name of the plaintiff's brother as talukhdar, who afterwards had been settled with, at both the summary settlements. By primogeniture, whether lineal or by proximity of degree (of which latter kind there was no evidence as to its being the customary one) he was the heir. To him a sanad had been granted, and the talukhdari had been entered in list II under the Act of 1869. On the other hand, it was urged that the above was consistent with the existence of a trust for the benefit of the titular talukhdar's uncles, of whom the defendant was the survivor, they having assented to the recognition of a nominal title in their nephew. Held that in intention as well as in form the grant of the talukhdari had been made absolutely to the sanad-holding talukhdar. In regard to the state of things before annexation, it might have been questioned whether or not the property was being held benami at that time. But after the Oudh Estates' Act, 1869, had become law, the title shown by the plaintiff must prevail, and he must recover the estate, unless a trust for the defendant should have been established. There had been no consideration given, and there was nothing to create a trust. There had been no transfer, no estoppel, and no bar by time. In 1868 an award had been made by a body of talukhdars as arbitrators within s. 33 of the Act, between members of the family other than the present disputants. This as well as a wajib-ul-urz of one of the villages of the talukh was admissible as evidence of what was the custom in regard to its devolution. In 1879 the plaintiff had, on his brother's death, while admitting "the custom prevailing in my family of gaddinashini," joined in a petition that the defendant's name should be entered dakhil kharij in the revenue records. Held that there might be a withdrawal of any gratuitous admission, unless there should be some obligation not to withdraw it; that there was no such obligation here; and that there had been no proof of any title upon which the admission could rest. MUHAMMAD IMAM ALI KHAN v. HUSAIN KHAN. I. L. R., 26 Calc., 81 [L. R., 25 I. A., 161

7. — A talukhdar settled with on terms imposing a trust on him—Settlement of estate—Second summary settlement, 1858—Effect of the confiscation—Rights of the Government.—A sanad-holding talukhdar, whose name has been entered in lists I and II, made in conformity with the Oudh Estates Act, 1869, holds the talukh subject to such trusts as have been validly created. At annexation, four descendants of a Mahomedan proprietor were entitled in equal shares to the ancestral estate, which in 1858, at the second summary settlement, was settled with the only one of the four who presented himself to the Settlement officer. The settlement with him, as talukhdar, which was then made, was, however, made upon terms providing that the absent co-sharers on their return should obtain their shares. This accorded with his application expressing his willingness. Held that the question whether the talukhdar had become a trustee for the plaintiff in respect of his share depended on the terms on which the estate had been granted to the talukhdar by the Government at the second summary settlement, it having been at their absolute disposal as a consequence of the confiscation of March 1858. The trust was not affected by the sanad. No special provision as to the co-sharer's return or admission to share had been deemed necessary by the Chief Commissioner, who authorized the settlement with the talukhdar in reliance on his assurance. The right of the co-sharer, who returned in 1859, was accordingly established. HASAN JAFAR v. MUHAMMAD ASKARI

8. ——— Title under sanad from Government—Trustee.—Although a sanad granted by the Government of India subsequent to the proclamation of March 1858, of an estate in Oudh, confers an absolute legal title on the grantee, such grantee may nevertheless, by an express declaration of trust, or by an agreement to hold in trust, constitute himself a trustee of the estate for a third party. SHEER BAHADUR SINGH v. 9. ——— Mortgage—Birt zamindari—Settlement—Under-proprietary rights—Sub-settlement—Malikana—Act XXVI of 1866.—An estate in Oudh, which had been confiscated under Lord Canning's proclamation of the 15th March 1858, was granted to B as talukhdar. G S, who at the date of the proclamation was in possession of the estate as mortgagee "with birt zamindari rights" under a conditional deed of sale from the former owner, was thereupon dispossessed, and B put into possession. Failing in other attempts to recover possession, G S brought a claim, in which he asserted proprietary right as mortgagee, and prayed that the regular settlement might be made with him. The claim was dismissed by the Settlement officer as being for a direct settlement of a superior proprietary right, and as such barred by the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869). On appeal to the Commissioner, the claim was modified into one for a sub-settlement of an under-proprietary right, and a decree was made declaring the plaintiff's under-proprietary zamindari title, and awarding him possession under the terms of the deed of conditional sale, till such time as the mortgage should be redeemed or the title perfected by foreclosure. On appeal to the Judicial Commissioner, this decree was reversed and the claim dismissed, on the ground that the effect of the mortgage-deed was to convey to the plaintiff, on the mortgage becoming absolute, the full proprietary title, and not merely a subordinate one. Held by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that the "birt zamindari rights," which the mortgage purported to convey, implied a merely subordinate zamindari interest, and that the claim of the plaintiff to a sub-settlement was valid. Quere—Whether, even if the interest intended to be conveyed by the mortgage was not in strictness sub-proprietary, a sub-settlement might not have been supported. Quere—Whether, under Act XXVI of

1. ——— s. 2 and ss. 13, 20, 22 (6) — Will of talukhdar—Registration of will—Succession to talukhdari—Son of deceased elder brother preferred to younger brother.—A written statement by a talukhdar made in 1860 in reply to enquiries by the Government, issued in the districts under circular orders regarding the succession of talukhdars, may come within the definition of a talukhdar's will in s. 2 of the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869). The statement was described by the talukhdar in a letter to the authorities in 1877 as "the will which has been submitted to the Lucknow district through the tahsil of Kursi on 6th April 1860." Held that this showed that he intended the statement of 1862 to be his will, and that the statement, as was held with regard to a similar one in Hurpurshad v. Sheo Dyal, L. R., 3 I. A., 259, was a will within the definition in the above section. The talukhdar declared in a subsequent will, of 19th August 1879, that no document purporting to be a will, the context whereof was repugnant to the will of the latter year, should be admitted as a will. But the instrument of 1860 was not repugnant to the will of 1879. Also the latter document was not registered in accordance with s. 20 of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869, and being inoperative as to the talukhdari estate, it could not revoke the will of 1860, which also was not rendered inoperative by any of the provisions of the Act. Held that by the true construction of s. 22, sub-s. 6, brothers take in the same manner as sons are directed to take by the preceding sub-sections; and that the descendants of a deceased elder brother are preferred as heirs to the younger surviving brother. HAIDAR ALI v. 2. ——— Succession to a talukhdari—Effect of declaration by holder as to who should be his heir.—The official enquiries made of talukhdars at an early period of British Administration, as to who were to be their successors, were not intended to derogate from the rights of talukhdars in their heritable and transferable estates. To such an enquiry an answer in 1862 made by a sanad-holding talukhdar, since deceased, who was entered in lists I and II (under the Oudh Estates Act, 1869), stated that she appointed to be her heir the father of the present plaintiff, appellant. The father, however, died before the talukhdar, and the son now claimed that this nomination amounted to a gift of the talukhdari estate, subject to a trust for the life of the then talukhdar. Held that the answer of 1862 did not operate to confer any estate upon the person named. BALBHANDAR SINGH v. OUDH ESTATES ACT (I OF 1869)

Will—Custom as to partition.—By the 8th paragraph of the Oudh proclamation of March 1858, it was declared that C L (at that time deceased), zamindar of Mourawan, and others, were, thenceforward the sole hereditary proprietors of the lands which they held when Oudh came under British rule, and which form part of the subject of these suits. Summary settlements of the said lands were subsequently made with G S (one of the sons of C L) by the Government between the 1st April 1858 and the 10th October 1859; a talukhdari sanad was granted to him before the passing of Act I of 1869; and he entered into a kabuliati for the same. His name was not entered in the second schedule annexed to the Act, but C L's was. By a document dated 7th February 1860, relating to property in the district of Oonao, and by other documents similar in effect relating to property in other districts, G S directed as follows: "I have been requested by Government to submit an application on the subject of primogeniture, with a view that the talukh may not be split into pieces as I would wish. Now the custom that has been followed in my family for generations past is this: that the eldest member of the family continues to be the head, while the others remain obedient to him; but every one possesses a share in the talukh. Under the custom of the family, the other brothers are at liberty to have their shares separated, should they wish it. The head has no power under the old custom to alienate the estate without consulting every sharer. I therefore wish that the old custom of maintaining the share of each shareholder be preserved, in opposition to the one in accordance with which one member of the family is allowed to succeed." In suits for partition amongst the descendants of C L and of his brother, who together constituted a Hindu joint family governed by the Mitakshara law, all the property the subject of the suits having been found to be the joint property of the said family, it was contended on behalf of the appellants in the first appeal that all the estates included in the sanad to their father G S, and summary settlements; whether previously joint property of the family or not, became the separate self-acquired property of G S; that he was the sole malguzar thereof; and that he and his sons were the sole beneficial owners of it, and that he had no power to transfer it by will or by alienation inter vivos. Held that the sanad and summary settlements were a mere grant by the Government to one member of the family of property which belonged to the family jointly, and were not intended to enure to the sole benefit of the grantee, and did not affect the rights of the family. As regards such property granted to G S (if any) which was not previously part of the family estates, it was granted for services presumably rendered with the use of the joint family funds, and could not therefore be separate self-acquired property within the meaning of the Hindu law. Held also that, assuming any portion of such property to have been self-acquired by G S, he must, in consequence of Act I of 1869, be deemed to have acquired therein a permanent heritable and transferable right, and had power by will, or alienation inter vivos, to transfer the same. Held further that the document of the 7th

February 1860 and other similar documents, so far as they related to the property in Oudh, amounted to a will within the definition of Act I of 1869, s. 2. Taken in conjunction with other documents, and having regard to the acts of different members of the family under it, the same amounted to evidence of an alienation inter vivos which in G S's lifetime transferred the property to the family to be held as joint family property. Ss. 16-19 of Act I of 1869 have no retrospective effect. *HURPURSHAD v. On a question whether or not a talukh, to which the Act was applicable, descended according to the rules of lineal primogeniture,—Held that where a talukhdar's name was entered in the second, but not in the third, of the lists maintained under the above Act, the estate, although it was to descend to a single heir, was not to be considered as passing according to the rules of lineal primogeniture. *ACHAL RAM v. The eldest of three brothers had succeeded to an impartible family estate, and to a talukh, also impartible, which had been, during the lifetime of their father, entered in the first and second, but not in the third, of the lists prepared in conformity with s. 8 of the Oudh Estates Act, I of 1869. Before his death, his eldest brother made an instrument registered as a will, but using the word "tamilik," and stamped as a deed whereby he gave the talukh to the third brother, reserving an interest in the whole for his own life, and in half for any son that might be born to him, with maintenance to his wife on her becoming a widow. Held with reference to the indicia of a testamentary character, there being provisions for contingencies which might not be ascertained till the death of the maker of the instrument, as compared with the technical matters attending it, that this instrument was not a transfer inter vivos, but was a will, and within the above Act. Held also, on the objection that a will or declaration made by the father had fixed a mode of descent which could not be altered by his successor, that s. 11 of the above Act, giving to every heir and legatee of a talukhdar power to transfer or to bequeath his estate, is not controlled by the proviso in s. 19, declaring that nothing in that section shall affect wills made before the passing of the Act. The impartible family property other than the talukh descending like the latter to a single successor, one of these brothers, the question as to which of them that one should be depended on the custom of the family. On the evidence adduced as to the custom in this respect, the plaintiff, who was out of possession, and on whom, in order to make out his title, was the burden of proving that the rule of primogeniture prevailed, failed to do so. ISHRI SINGH v. If, as happened in the present case, where the estate descended to a single heir, the heir according to lineal primogeniture is more remote in degree from the ancestor than other persons, who may be collaterals, coming within the line of heirship, then according to the classification in the Oudh Estates Act, nearness in degree prevails over directness of line. But if two collaterals, or other persons in the line of heirship, are equal in degree, then the person rightly entitled is indicated by the seniority of the line to which he belongs. S. 22, sub-s. 11 of the Act, referring to the law which would govern descent in default of any heirs who would come under the special provisions of the Act, includes in that law family custom when established. In an attempt to prove a family custom to the effect that females should not inherit, no proof was afforded by the production of certain wajib-ul-arazi, as to which there was nothing to show that the villages of which they were recorded were the villages in suit, or belonging to the family which was disputing the succession. BHAI NARINDAR BAHADUR SINGH v. It appeared that under a number of family transactions the property in suit had been given to the defendant for such interest and with such right of succession to the plaintiff as by virtue of the law of the Mitakshara attaches to ancestral immoveable estate as between father and son. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration to that effect, and that s. 10 was no bar to his assertion of the interest declared to be vested in him. SETH JAIDIAL v. It may be doubted whether the mere title to maintenance would be such an "interest" as would come within the meaning of the exceptions. 3. ———— Meaning of "intestate" as there used—Written but unregistered authority to adopt—Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 17.—The Oudh Estates Act, 1869, requires the registration of the writing by which an authority to adopt is exercised; but not the registration of the authority, which is required by the Act to be in writing. The Indian Registration Act (III of 1877), which does require authorities to adopt to be registered, expressly excepts authorities conferred by will. The word "intestate," in s. 13, sub-s. 1, of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869, means intestate as to the talukhdari estate; and the use of the word does not exclude from the exception in that sub-section a son adopted under an authority conferred by a talukhdar's unregistered will. A talukhdar by his will authorized his senior widow to select and adopt a minor male child of his family to be the owner of the entire riasat. This power having been exercised, the following objections to the adoption were disallowed: first, one founded on the will not having been registered, and, consequently, the authority not having been registered; secondly, one founded on the erroneous argument that the adopted son was not within the class excepted in s. 13, sub-s. 1, and therefore could not take under an unregistered will. BHAIYA RABIDAT SINGH v. ss. 121, 123—Transfer of share of under-proprietors in arrears of rent—Right to interest on rent from transferees—Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 141.—Under the Oudh Land Revenue Act, 1876, ss. 121, 123, the shares of defaulting under-proprietors were transferred to three of them who offered to pay. The present suit was brought by the superior proprietor, the talukhdar, in whose estate the mehal was comprised, against the whole body of under-proprietors for arrears of rent accrued, while the term of the above transfer was running. Held that the provision in s. 123 of the Oudh Land Revenue Act, 1876, to the effect that such transfer shall not affect the joint liability of the co-sharers of the mehal, had not the effect of charging the co-sharers other than the three transferees with any liability for rent accrued during the term of the transfer. Interest was also claimed, but as to this it was held that under-proprietors were not tenants within the meaning of the Oudh Rent Act, 1886, s. 141, providing for payment of interest on rents due from tenants. MUHAMMAD MEHNDI ALI KHAN v. The Judicial Commissioner, having called for the record under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, set aside the decree, which had been affirmed on appeal. He was of opinion that the suit should not have been brought against the Deputy Commissioner in the above character, but would only lie against a manager appointed as Act XXXV of 1868 directed, or else against a guardian. This judgment, having gone upon a technicality not well founded, was reversed, and the original decree was restored. ASHARFI LAL v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF BARA BANKI

1. ——— Right to sub-settlement—
Under-tenures held under contract.—Under-tenures held under contract, or under any arrangements from which a contract may be inferred, are within the definition of sub-proprietary rights given in the rules annexed to Act XXVI of 1866, and their holders are entitled to a sub-settlement. *MAHARAJAH OF BULRAMPORE v. [L. R., 5 I. A., 225]

2. ——— Under-proprietary right in Ouddh—Settlement—Circular Order, 29th January 1861—Birt sankalp and khushast sankalp tenu.—A provision in the Chief Commissioner's Circular Order of 29th January 1861 in effect declares that, to found a claim to a birt tenure in Ouddh, possession must be shown to have existed in 1855, the year before annexation. This was assumed, for the purposes of this decision, to have had the force of law at the time when the Financial Commissioner ruled, in Circular Orders 5 and 6 of 5th June 1868, that "a claimant who cannot prove possession of his sankalp holding in 1262-63 Fasli (1854-55) has no locus standi in Court." Whether rightly treated by the Ouddh Courts as an enactment of limitation, or rather to be considered as a disability affecting title, this provision was repealed by the effect of Acts XVI of 1865, s. 5, and XIII of 1866, s. 1, the suit of a birtiah becoming thereupon cognizable, notwithstanding that he might not have been in possession in 1855. The words of limitation in the Circular Order apply to all birt tenures, including those that are termed "sankalp," when the latter are in the nature of birts. Rules I and II in the schedule of the Ouddh Sub-Settlement Act, XXVI of 1866, held not to exclude the plaintiff, he having shown that he, and those through whom he claimed, did not, in the words of those rules, hold the land, "through privilege, or by favour of 'the talukhdar,' but held by an under-proprietary right, under contract 'pucks,' with some degree of continuousness, since the village came into the talukh." DRIG BIRAI SING v. 3.——— Right of tenant under talukhdari settlement—Tenancy-at-will—Right of resumption—Absence of under-proprietary right.—At the confiscation and restoration of Oudh lands in 1858, it was intended to settle and restore under regulation to the talukhdars, with certain exceptions, the talukhdars' rights, and also to protect as far as was necessary, by sub-settlement or otherwise, the existing rights of the occupiers; but there is nothing to show any intention to advance beyond what the rights were at the time. Where the relation of talukhdar and tenant at a rent of land within a talukh has been shown to have existed at that date, and since the tenant cannot defeat the talukhdar's right of resumption on due notice, notwithstanding a lengthened duration of tenancy, he is entitled to an under-proprietary right, either on the ground that, by reason of this state of things having brought him within the meaning of paragraph 2 of the schedule to Act XXVI of 1866, or on the ground that time and undisturbed enjoyment have ripened his holding into a species of ownership. The issues between the parties raising only the question of some form of proprietary right, still, if the tenant had shown any right whatever to remain undisturbed by the talukhdar, such right would have been considered on this appeal and would have received effect. The allegation of a grant in perpetuity in 1826 at a rent to be varied according to the amount of revenue payable by the talukhdar, not having been proved, but the existence and origin of a tenancy having been shown at a rent, paid down to the commencement of the suit,—Held that length of enjoyment, coupled with such payment of rent, could give no greater force to the tenant's right than it originally possessed. ROHAN SINGH v. 5. ——— Measurement and mapping by Ameen.—Where an Ameen measured and mapped land, and altered his map on objection made, the proceedings, as being merely upon paper, and not interrupting the actual possession or occupation of the land, were held not to amount to an act of ownership by either of the parties concerned, or to affect the question of possession. *JANOKEE NATH CHOWDHRY v. 6. ——— Adjoining buildings—Walls of adjoining buildings on same foundation.—Where the external walls of two adjoining houses which now belong to different owners, but which at one time were the property of the same person, have been erected wholly or partly on the same foundation wall, and there is an entire absence of evidence on either side as to the dates of the several purchases, or of the terms on which they were made, the presumption is that the line of demarcation of the two properties is that indicated by the superincumbent walls. RADHA MOHUN ROY v. RAJ CHUNDER DASS [2 C. L. R., 377]

7. ——— Diversion of road—Right of owners of land adjoining old road—Public road.—There is a presumption that a highway, or waste land adjoining thereto, belongs to the owners of the soil of the adjoining land. NIHAL CHAND v. AZMAT ALI KHAN . . . I. L. R., 7 All., 362

8. ——— Forest lands in Malabar—Hindu law—Property in the soil—Right of Sovereign.—In the district of Malabar and the tracts administered as part of it, there is no presumption that forest lands are the property of the Crown. According to the Hindu law, a right to the possession of land is acquired by the first person who makes a beneficial use of the soil, the right of the Sovereign being to assess the occupier to revenue. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. VIRA RAYAN [I. L. R., 9 Mad., 175]

9. ——— Forest lands—Acts of ownership—Property in the soil—Construction of istemrari sanad of 1803 as to lands granted—Evidence of possession—Questions of fact—Proof of zamindari title.—A zamindar claimed from the Government the proprietary possession of a tract of hill and forest, in virtue of an istemrari sanad of the year 1803, conferring upon the grantee, his heirs and successors a permanent property in the zamindari as then possessed. To the sanad, which was aptly worded to include the subject of this claim, the acts of the zamindar had been ascribed. But it did not contain any description of the lands which it was intended to carry, a marginal note only specifying three villages then comprising the zamindari. The plaintiff having proved that he and his ancestors had cut wood, pastured cattle, and gathered forest produce in certain forests for fifty years, the lower Court held that such acts of enjoyment were only evidence of an easement and not of adverse possession. Held by the High Court that these acts, as they had been done under the belief and assertion that the said tracts formed portion of the zamindari, and that the plaintiff and his ancestors were owners of the said tracts, were evidence of adverse possession. In principle, an act done is one of ownership or evidence of an easement according as the person doing it asserts general ownership or a particular right in another property. The enjoyment of any right of ownership over the soil is prima facie proof of ownership of the soil. Where, therefore, the lower Court found such an enjoyment of a forest as proved title to the profits thereof, and such enjoyment was accompanied with an assertion of ownership of the soil,—Held that the Court was bound to find a title to the soil established. SIVASUBRAMANAYA v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA

Held by the Privy Council on appeal (affirming the decision of the High Court) that the grant was not confined to the villages so named, and to an area in their immediate vicinity, but that the whole tract of hill and forest was claimable on its being shown, by direct evidence or reasonable inference, that it was in the possession of the zamindar when he obtained a permanent title from the Government. As to part of the tract, the zamindar's acts of possession, such as grazing cattle, cutting timber, and collecting forest produce, had been exclusive of the exercise of such rights by any other persons; but as to another part of the tract, his acts of that character had been concurrent with a similar user of hill and forest by raiyats of neighbouring villages, not part of the zamindari and belonging to the Government. Held, as to both parts, that the acts of possession, which had been found by both the Courts below to have been done by the zamindar, did not fall short of proving his proprietary possession, and that the user by the villagers, not having taken place in the assertion of conflicting proprietary right, and whether or not they were sufficient to establish rights of easement, were neither in amount nor quality sufficient to displace the zamindar's proprietary title. The decision of the first Court that the exercise of the abovementioned rights by the zamindar was evidence only of the right on his part to use the land of another for the purposes indicated, had been rightly reversed by the High Court. Where the proprietary right in a tract of land had been constantly asserted, all questions between the disputants as to the amount of the use of the tract by the claimant, and as to the sufficiency of such use to establish his possession over the whole extent, were held to be questions of fact. *SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. Held that, although the judgment-debtor's predecessor planted the tree while acting as mutwali, he could acquire no property in the tree by so doing, nor could any benefit, which he or the present mutwali might have derived by taking the fruit of the tree, enable them to acquire any right of ownership in the tree as against the shrine. 1. ———— Dealings with parda women
—Onus of proof—Evidence of bona fides.—A Hindu parda woman is entitled to receive in the Courts of this country that protection which the Court of Chancery in England always extends to the weak, ignorant and infirm, and to those who for any other reason are specially likely to be imposed upon by the exertion of undue influence, which is presumed to have been exerted unless the contrary be shown. In all dealings, therefore, with persons so situated, it is incumbent on the party interested in upholding the transaction to show that its terms are fair and equitable; the most usual mode of discharging such onus being to show that the lady had good independent advice in the matter, and acted therein altogether at arm's-length from the other contracting party. RAKHUN v. AHMED HOSSEIN . 22 W. R., 443

2. ———— Execution of deed by pardanashin—Registration of deed—Evidence of execution.—In cases of transactions by parda women, mere registration does not go far to corroborate the proof of their validity, unless a mutation of names takes place, which, if done under a mooktearnama, has not the same effect as against a parda woman as it has against a person capable of transacting his own business and acting for himself. Where the conveyance by a parda woman is impeached, there ought to be clear evidence, not of the mere signature by the party, but that the secluded woman had the means of knowing what she was about. FUZZUL HOSSEIN v. AMJUD ALI KHAN . 17 W. R., 523

3. ———— Registration—Evidence of genuineness.—The mere registration of a lease is no proof of its genuineness, especially in the case of a lease which was first produced as a valid instrument nearly nine years after its execution, and which was alleged to have been granted by a pardanashin lady, but no satisfactory evidence was given that she had put her signature and seal to it, and that she did so with a knowledge of the nature and contents of the instrument. DOOLEE CHAND v. OOMDA KHANUM . 18 W. R., 238

4. ———— Explanation of document.—In order to charge a pardanashin woman upon an instrument or power purporting to have been executed by her, it is requisite that the person relying on such a document should give satisfactory evidence that it has been explained to and understood by her. *SUDISHT LAL v. any intention of creating an absolute wakf, or that she understood the effect of the deed when she executed it, the onus was on the plaintiffs to show that she was fully aware of the character of the document and its legal effect, and that she had proper professional advice at the time of its execution. In the absence of such proof,—Held that the deed was not binding on her. DEBROOS BANOO BEGUM v. ASHGAR ALI KHAN

Held, in the same case, on appeal to the Privy Council, who affirmed the judgment of the High Court: A Court, when dealing with the disposition of her property by a parda woman, ought to be satisfied that the transaction was explained to her, and that she knew what she was doing; especially in a case where, without legal assistance, for no consideration, and without any equivalent, she has executed a document, written in a language she does not understand, which deprives her of all her property. In the case of a pardanashin woman who has no legal assistance, the ordinary presumption, that if a person of competent capacity signs a deed, he understands the instrument to which he has affixed his name, does not arise. ASHGAR ALI v. 6. Death-bed disposition—Proof of bona fide intention.—Where a deed purports to have been executed by a parda woman, the Court should see that it was fairly taken from her, and that she was a free agent and duly informed of what she was about. When the disposition is in the nature of a death-bed disposition, the Court that upholds it ought, from whomsoever it proceeded, to be satisfied that it was the free voluntary act of the party by whom it purports to have been executed, and expressed her real intention. GRISH CHUNDER LAHOREE v. 9. Contract with pardanashin woman—Proof as to knowledge of transaction before execution of document.—Where two Nambudri females—a mother and daughter (plaintiff)—executed a document in favour of defendant, a male relative (nephew of the former), which purported to divest the plaintiff and her mother of the entire property of the illom of which they were the sole proprietors, and to vest it in the defendant in consideration of his promise to marry and raise up heirs to the illom to which the plaintiff and her mother belonged, and to maintain the plaintiff and her mother till death, and it was proved that plaintiff was well aware of what she was doing, and had subsequently clearly recognised the defendant as absolute proprietor of the property and was contented with his having assumed the position pointed out in the document,—Held that the transaction was valid, and could not be called into question on the suggestion that plaintiff was placed at a disadvantage and was not fully cognizant of the irrevocable nature of the deed; and that the rule laid down by the Privy Council in Ashgar Ali v. Delroos Banoo Begam, I. L. R., 3 Calc., 324, and in Tacoorddeen Tewarry v. Ali Hossein Khan, L. R., 1 I. A., 192, had been complied with, and that defendant had discharged the burden of proof upon him. TAMARASHERRI SIVITHIRIS ANDARJANOM v. MARANAT VASUDRVAN NAMBUDEIPAD I. L. R., 3 Mad., 215

11. Conditions necessary to the valid execution of a document by pardanashin—Suit to set aside deed—Onus probandi.—Where a deed executed by a pardanashin woman is sought to be set aside, it is for the party wishing to uphold the deed to show affirmatively that the transaction intended to be carried out by the deed was a reasonable one; that the executant was fully cognizant of the meaning and legal and practical effect thereof, and that she executed the same with her full and free consent, that is to say, that she had independent advice on the subject and was not otherwise as, e.g., by reason of bodily or mental infirmity or by reason of fraud or coercion practised upon her, incapable of giving a rational consent to the transaction. One M., a pardanashin lady of some 70 years of age, and more or less illiterate, executed on the 11th September 1888 a deed which purported to divest her immediately of all her property in favour of her son H, who was dumb and imbecile, her daughter S who was named in the deed as guardian of H, and that daughter's son Y. Y was betrothed to a daughter of one F, and one of S's daughters was married to one S H. Those two persons, viz., F and S H, were mainly instrumental in procuring the execution of the deed in question. The deed was drafted in very artificial language, and it was not shown that the executant ever understood its contents or effect. The executant was, moreover, at the time of execution in ill-health and great mental distress, owing to the death of her son, H, which had happened some months previously. The deed was also executed in the absence of the person who was at that time the executant's chief adviser and the manager of her property. Lastly, it appeared that, as soon as the executant came to know what the true nature of the deed was, and that proceedings had been initiated in the Revenue Department for mutation of names, she took immediate measures to show her dissent from the provisions of the deed and her disapproval of what had been done thereunder. Held that under the circumstances above set forth the deed in question could not be considered as having been executed under the conditions necessary in such cases, and must be set aside. *Ashgar Ali v. 17. ———— Gift by Mahomedan lady to one in a fiduciary position.—Where a Mahomedan lady conveyed to her confidential adviser and two other persons the house in which she dwelt by deed of gift, which (though read over and explained to her by a clerk who acted both for the donees and her) was executed by the lady without independent professional advice, and without the advice of the heads of her caste, it was decreed, at the instance of her heirs after her death, that the deed should be set aside. RUFABAI v. 18. ———— Proof of execution—Evidence of knowledge of contents and of free agency.—A suit was brought upon a bond purporting to have been executed on behalf of two Mahomedan pardanashin ladies by their husbands, and to charge their immoveable property. The bond was compulsorily registerable, and it was presented for registration by a person who professed to be authorised by a power-of-attorney in that behalf. The only proof given by the plaintiff that this power-of-attorney was executed by the ladies, or with their knowledge and consent, was the evidence of a witness who deposed that he was not personally acquainted with them, nor did he know their voices; that he went to their residence; that there were two women behind a parda who the executants of the bond said were their respective wives, and that these women acknowledged they had made the power-of-attorney. There was nothing to show that the ladies had ever benefited in any way from the money advanced under the bond. Held that, even if the ladies behind the parda were in fact the two defendants, this evidence would not be enough to bind them, and that it was for the plaintiff, who sought to bring their property to sale on the strength of a transaction with them, to show that they were free agents in the matter, and, having a clear knowledge of what they were doing, accorded their consent to it. *Buzloor Rahsem v. — Sale of an undivided share—Burden of proving validity of sale by a gosha woman.—Suit for partition and possession of an undivided share of property sold to plaintiff by an aged gosha lady of the class of Canarese Mahomedans called Navayats. The property sold was the vendor's share as heiress of her father, brother, and sister, who died in 1856, 1866, and 1871, respectively; but it appeared that, the property of the family had been in the possession of one managing member since 1856. Held that, the plaintiff having discharged the burden of proving that the conveyance to him was voluntarily executed, and that the transaction evidenced by it was real and bond fide, the conveyance was operative. KHATIFA v. ISMAIL 1. L. R., 12 Mad., 380

20. ————— Sale of villages by a wife to her husband—Proof of execution of deed of sale.—The purchase-money had not been paid on what purported to be a deed of sale of villages by a Mahomedan wife to her husband for a price which, however, the deed acknowledged to have been paid. After her death, two of her relations, disputing the due execution of the sale-deed, sued the husband, who had obtained possession, claiming in the alternative either that they should obtain their shares in the property of the deceased, or, if the sale of the villages should be maintained, that they should receive their proportion of the price as due to the estate left by her. The two Courts below concurred in finding that the wife, a pardanashin, was capable of managing her own affairs, and that she had not received the price. The first Court inferred from the state of things that the wife had in a manner made a gift of the villages to the husband. The High Court reversed that judgment, and decided that, with regard to the probability of influence on the part of the husband, the absence of any independent advice for the wife and other circumstances, the transaction was without effect. The Judicial Committee found that there not being a case of undue influence exercised, either made by the plaint or raised by the issues, they found no evidence that the price stated was inadequate, or the sale an improvident one, or that the husband had been released from having to pay the price. From the findings on the evidence the pre-emption was that the wife intended to pass the property for some purpose, and that the suggestion of a gift being excluded, the deed operated as a sale according to what it purported to be. They did not throw any doubt on the sound doctrine, laid down in numerous cases, as to the obligations upon persons taking benefits from pardanashin ladies. 32. — Personal appearance in Court—Practice.—Although there is no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code which protects pardanashin ladies from appearing in a Court of Justice, nevertheless it is very undesirable to compel the attendance of such persons. It cannot be admitted as a general principle that pardanashin ladies whose evidence is required in criminal trials are to be allowed to compel the Courts to examine them at some other place than the Court house itself. In the matter of the petition of Din Tarini Debi, I. L. R., 15 Cal., 775, and In re Farid-un-nissa, I. L. R., 5 All., 92, referred to. Where a Magistrate considered it necessary to take the evidence of a pardanashin lady, who objected to appear in Court, the High Court directed him to make arrangements so as to take her evidence either in an empty Court-room in the presence of himself, the accused, and the pleader for the prosecution, or, if no empty Court-room were available, in his own private room or some other room in the Court building. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF BASANT BIBI

10. ——— Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 337, 389—Accomplice—Tender of pardon, Effect of—Subsequent trial of accomplice for connected offences.—A prisoner charged before a Magistrate at Benares with offences punishable under ss. 471, 472, and 474 of the Penal Code, made a confession to the Magistrate in respect of those offences. He was then sent in custody to Calcutta, and was there, together with other persons, charged before a Magistrate with offences punishable under ss. 467, 473, and 475. The conduct to which these charges related was closely connected and mixed up with that to which the charges first-mentioned had reference. Under s. 337 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate at Calcutta tendered a pardon to the prisoner upon the condition specified in that section, and the prisoner accepted the pardon, and gave evidence for the prosecution. The Magistrate held that this evidence was not sufficiently corroborated, and accordingly discharged all the accused, but the pardon was not withdrawn, and there was nothing to show that the Magistrate was dissatisfied with the prisoner's statements or considered that he had not complied with the conditions on which the pardon was tendered. Subsequently the prisoner was committed by the Magistrate of Benares for trial before the Court of Session upon the charges under ss. 471, 472, and 474 of the Penal Code. He pleaded not guilty, but did not in terms plead the pardon as a bar to the trial, though he made some reference to the subject; and the Sessions Judge, having made a brief inquiry as to the proceedings at Calcutta, came to the conclusion that there was no sufficient proof of any conditional pardon, and convicted and sentenced the accused. Held that, by the terms of the conditional pardon granted to the accused by the Calcutta Magistrate, the conditions of which were satisfied as was shown by its never having been withdrawn, the accused was protected from trial at Benares in respect of the offences under ss. 471, 472, and 474, and was not liable to be proceeded against in respect of them, and that the trial and conviction were therefore illegal. Although s. 337 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not in terms cover a case where a Magistrate holding a preliminary inquiry for committal against several persons, tenders a conditional pardon to one of them, examines him as a witness, and subsequently discharges all the accused for want of a prima facie case against them, the words "every person accepting a tender under this section shall be examined as a witness in the case" mean that for all purposes (subject to failure to satisfy the conditions of the pardon as provided for by s. 339) such a person ceases to be triable for the offence or offences under inquiry or (with reference to s. 339) for "any other offence of which he appears to have been guilty in connection with the same matter" while making "a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offences" directly under inquiry. The words last quoted refer to the importance, when a pardon is tendered, of encouraging the approver to give the fullest details, so that points may be found in his evidence which may be capable of corroboration. The question of how far the pardon protects him, and what portion of it should not protect him, ought not to be treated in a narrow spirit. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GANGA CHARAN I. L. R., 11 All., 79

The pardon was accepted, and the person to whom it was tendered was examined as a witness for the prosecution. Subsequently, and after certain other witnesses for the prosecution had been examined, the Magistrate, being of opinion that the person to whom pardon had been tendered had not made a full disclosure of the facts of the case, withdrew the pardon, put the person to whom it had been tendered back in the dock, and ultimately committed him along with the other accused to the Court of Session. Held that the commitment of the person whose pardon had been withdrawn must be quashed, inasmuch as he had had

Pending such inquiry, one P appeared before the Magistrate of the neighbouring district of Etah and obtained from him a tender of pardon in respect of the said dacoity, on the strength of which pardon he was examined as a witness by the Magistrate of the Etah district and made a statement implicating himself and others in the dacoity. Subsequently, on the case being committed to the Court of the Sessions Judge of Agra, the tender of pardon made by the District Magistrate of Etah was ignored and P was tried and sentenced for the dacoity. Held, on appeal to the High Court, that the Magistrate of the Etah District had no jurisdiction under the circumstances to make the tender of pardon which he did, and that his action in that respect was not covered by s. 529 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 4. ——— Parsis in mofussil of Bombay Presidency—English law—Rule against perpetuities—Equity and good conscience—Gift to heirs of A from generation to generation—The law applicable to Parsis in the mofussil of the Presidency of Bombay is, in the absence of evidence of any specific law or usage applicable to the particular case, "justice, equity, and good conscience alone." In applying "justice, equity, and good conscience" to the facts of any particular case, the Courts will be guided by the general Principles of English law applicable to a similar state of circumstances, and so as, if possible, to give effect to the intentions of the parties concerned, where such intentions are clearly expressed, and are not repugnant to any general principle of English law. The Courts will not, in such a case, apply rules of English law which, though well established and binding on English Courts, are yet so special in their nature and origin as to be inapplicable to the different circumstances of this country. The members of a Parsi family, the heirs of one Framji Cowasji Banaji, deceased, entered into an agreement with one another, bearing date the 24th May 1851, by which they agreed that the remaining income, after paying the deceased's debts, of a certain estate which had belonged to the deceased, called the Poway estate—an estate situated in the Island of Salsette, and therefore in the mofussil of the Presidency of Bombay—should be apportioned "to the heirs mentioned in cl. 7 (of the agreement)"—i.e., among the various heirs of Framji Cowasji Banaji, deceased, the parties to the agreement—"but, after their death, their shares are to be enjoyed and received by their heirs and children from generation to generation for ever." It was contended that, Parsis being subject to English law, these words conferred an absolute estate in their respective shares upon the various parties to the agreement under the rule in Shelley's case. Held per BAYLEY, J. that the plain intention of the parties to the agreement, appearing on the face of the agreement, was that they themselves should take only a life-estate to the extent of their respective shares in the remaining income of the Poway estate; and that the rule in Shelley's case should not be applied so as to defeat that plain intention. Held on appeal (affirming the order of BAYLEY, J.) that, even assuming English law to be applicable, the English law so to be applied could not include the rule in Shelley's case, which is a law of property or tenure based on feudal considerations, and unsuited to the circumstances of India; that the rule of construction to be applied to the agreement must in any case be to give effect to the intention of the parties according to the plain meaning of the language; and that to construe the agreement as giving more than a life-interest to the parties thereto would be to defeat their obvious intention. MITHIBAI v. LIMJI NOWROJI BANAJI . I. L. R., 5 Bom., 506

5. ——— The same agreement came before the Court for its construction in a suit brought by the parties interested for the administration of the estate of Framji Cowasji Banaji. In that suit it was contended, and was held by the Division Court, that the subsequent gift to the "heirs and children (of the signatories) from generation to generation for ever" was void as infringing the rule against perpetuities. On appeal, Held that the settlement in favour of the heirs and children of each signatory was in law a valid settlement and not void as creating a perpetuity. In the absence of words in the context showing that they were intended to take less, the respective heirs and children of the signatories took an absolute estate. A gift to the heirs of A from generation to generation confers on them, when ascertained, the same estate as

6. Marriage of Parsis—Act XV of 1865, s. 30—Bigamy—Divorce.—A Parsi residing in Bombay after the passing of Act XV of 1865, but before it came into operation, contracted a second marriage during the lifetime of his wife, from whom he had not been divorced, and whom he, moreover, wilfully deserted for two years. On appeal from an order by the Judge of the Parsi Chief Matrimonial Court rejecting a plaint for divorce by the first wife, on the ground that the subject-matter of the plaint did not constitute a cause of action under s. 30 of Act XV of 1865, and Act VIII of 1859, s. 32.—Held that the facts alleged in the plaint did not amount to "bigamy coupled with adultery," nor to "adultery coupled with wilful desertion," within the meaning of s. 30 of Act XV of 1865, as a second marriage contracted by a Parsi husband during the lifetime of his first wife was not unlawful before the Act came into operation, nor did the provisions of the Act in any way affect the validity or the consequence of such a marriage. AVABAI v. 7. Husband and wife—Parsi Matrimonial Court—Act XV of 1865—Suit by wife for judicial separation—Alimony after decree dismissing wife's suit and pending appeal—Alimony pending petition for review of judgment—Practice in allotment of alimony—Discretion of Court.—A wife sued her husband for judicial separation in the Parsi Matrimonial Court. Alimony was granted to her by an order dated 11th July 1891, which directed the defendant to pay alimony to her from the 15th April 1891, "until the final decree herein be passed." On the 18th July 1891 the suit was dismissed, and after that date the defendant ceased to pay alimony. The plaintiff obtained a rule for review of judgment, which was discharged on the 27th January 1892, and on the 18th March 1892 she filed an appeal against the decree dismissing the suit and against the order refusing a review. She now applied for an order directing the defendant to pay her all the arrears of alimony "pendente lite" from the date of filing the suit, or so much as had not been paid, and that he should pay her further alimony until the final disposal of the appeal. Held, (1) dismissing the application, that the words "final decree herein," contained in the order of the 11th July 1891, by which alimony was granted, meant the decree in the suit, and not in the appeal; (2) that the Parsi Matrimonial Court, constituted under Act XV of 1865, had no power to award alimony "pendente lite" after decree and pending appeal; (3) an unsuccessful wife is not entitled to claim alimony after final decree and pending appeal, nor for the period during which she is seeking review of judgment. Quære—Whether the Court where a petition for review is pending before it has a discretion to allot or continue alimony "pendente lite." The words, "during the suit" in s. 33 of Act XV of 1865 include the period up to the making of a final or absolute decree. Ellis v. Ellis, L. R., 8 P. D.,

10. Infant marriage among Parsis—Consent of father or guardian—Suit to declare an infant marriage null and void—High Court—Parsi Matrimonial Court—Jurisdiction—Act XV of 1865—Letters Patent, s. 12—English law—Subsequent consent or repudiation—Adoption of Hindu practice by Parsis.—In 1868 the plaintiff and defendant, then of the ages of seven and six years, respectively, went through the ceremony of marriage in the presence of their respective parents and according to the rites of their religion. The formal consent on behalf of the plaintiff was not given by his father, but by his uncle, with whom he was living and by whom he had been adopted. Nineteen years afterwards the plaintiff filed this suit praying for a declaration that the pretended marriage was null and void, and did not create the status of husband and wife between the plaintiff and defendant. The defendant resisted the suit, and claimed to be the lawful wife of the plaintiff. The plaintiff and defendant never lived together as man and wife, nor was the marriage ever consummated. Held that, under the circumstances, the formal consent of the uncle and the tacit consent of the father were enough to satisfy the requirements of s. 8 of Act XV of 1865, which requires the previous consent of the father or guardian to the marriage. Held further that, such a suit not being in the category of suits relegated to a special Court by Act XV of 1865, the jurisdiction to try it remained in the High Court, to which it had been given by s. 12 of the Letters Patent. Held also that the law to be applied was the English law (subject, however, to any well-established usage); that by the English law such a marriage would be an inchoate and imperfect marriage capable of repudiation by either party after arriving at years of discretion, but capable also of being made a valid and binding marriage by the consent of the parties thereto after they had arrived at such age. Held further that the circumstances of the case showed that there had been such acquiescence in, and acceptance of, the marriage by the plaintiff after arriving at years of discretion as to render the marriage valid and binding on him, and incapable of subsequent repudiation. Consummation is the best proof of consent to a marriage, but is not the only proof. And semble that, although the practice of infant marriages is one which finds no warrant in their own religious system, the Parsis in Western India have in the course of centuries so generally adopted such practice from their Hindu neighbours as to give such marriages amongst themselves all the validity they possess amongst Hindus, making them independent of any question of subsequent consent or non-consent by the parties thereto.

11. — Parsi Succession Act (XXI of 1865), s. 5—"Widower," Meaning of word—A widower on second marriage is still a widower relatively to deceased wife.—In s. 5 of the Parsi Succession Act (XXI of 1865) the word "widower" means a widower relatively to the deceased wife only, and without consideration of the fact or possibility of the widower re-marrying. D, a Parsi, died intestate on the 19th September 1885, leaving a widow (the defendant) and two daughters and the heirs of a pre-deceased daughter J him surviving. J had been the wife of the plaintiff, and had died thirty-four years before the date of this suit, leaving, as her heirs, her husband (the plaintiff) and one daughter, who was still living. After J's death, the plaintiff married again, and his second wife was living at the date of this suit. Letters of administration to D's estate were granted to his widow, the defendant. The plaintiff claimed a share in D's estate, contending that he was the widower of J, one of the daughters of the intestate, and entitled as such under s. 5 of the Parsi Intestate Succession Act (XXI of 1865). Held that he was the widower of J within the meaning of the section, and as such was entitled to a share in D's estate. 12. — Infant marriage among Parsis—Custom—Suit for declaration of nullity of infant marriage—Age of majority applicable in case of such suit—Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), ss. 2 and 3—Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act (XV of 1865), s. 3—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 120.—A Parsi female, within three years after she had attained the age of twenty-one, brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Broach for a declaration that a marriage ceremony performed in 1869, when she was not three years old, did not create the status of husband and wife between her and the defendant. She had never lived with the defendant as his wife. The Subordinate Judge held that the marriage was valid and binding, being of opinion that the custom of infant marriage among the Parsis was well established and recognized. On appeal the Judge confirmed the decree, holding that at all events in 1869, when the marriage took place, the custom was common and recognized as binding. On second appeal the High Court concurred with the opinion expressed in Peshotam v. Meherbai, I. L. R., 13 Bom., 302, that the Zoroastrian system did not contemplate marriage in infancy, but the lower Courts having found a custom had grown up among Parsis in India validating such marriages, and that the custom was in force in 1869, did not consider it open on second appeal to arrive at an independent finding as to whether the evidence established the existence of such a custom. Held that a Parsi suing to have a marriage declared void is "acting in the matter of marriage," and therefore the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), which makes the age of eighteen the age of majority, does not apply to a question of limitation with regard to such suit. The age of majority in such a case is that prescribed by the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act (XV of 1865), viz., twenty-one years. Held also that art. 120 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) was applicable to the above suit, and that the plaintiff having, for the purpose of bringing the suit, attained her majority at twenty-one, the suit was not barred. Act XV of 1865 contains no provision as to the age at which a Parsi marriage can be validly contracted, the matter being left to the general law which governs Parsis in that particular, just as the English Marriage Act (4 Geo. IV, c. 76) leaves it to be dealt with by the common law of England. BAI SHIBINBAI v. KHARSHEDJI NABARVANJI MASALAVALA

13. — Intestate succession among Parsis—Parsi Succession Act (XXI of 1865), s. 7, sch. II, cl. 2—Next-of-kin.—One Jerbai, a Parsi widow, died intestate and without issue, her father, mother, three brothers and two sisters having predeceased her. Two of her brothers and one sister had left children. Some of these children had also predeceased her, leaving children (grand-nephews and nieces of Jerbai). Two of this last mentioned class had also predeceased her, leaving children (great-grand nephews and nieces of Jerbai). Held that Jerbai's property should, in the first instance, be divided into three shares, i.e., one for each of the two predeceased brothers who left children, and one for the predeceased sister who left a child. Each brother's share to be two-fifths and the sister's one-fifth. These shares to be sub-divided among the descendants of the two brothers and the sister, respectively, no descendant being entitled to share concurrently with his or her ancestor, and, on each division and sub-division, each male taking double the share of each female standing in the same degree of propinquity. In art. 2 of the second schedule of the Parsi Succession Act (XXI of 1865) the gift to lineal descendants is substitutional in the sense that they take nothing if the head of their branch of the family is living, whereas, if he is dead, they stand in his place and take the share which he would have taken. In distributing an estate, therefore, "among brothers and sisters and the lineal descendants of such of them as have predeceased the intestate," the primary division must be per stirpes. If there are surviving brothers and lineal descendants of a predeceased brother, then each surviving brother will take equal shares with the lineal descendants collectively. If all the brothers are dead, then the share which each would have taken, had he survived, will be taken by his lineal descendants. If in either case the predeceased was a sister, her lineal descendants will take her half-share only. In both ss. 6 and 7 of the Parsi Succession Act the words "next-of-kin" and "relatives" are synonymous, and are collective names for the persons mentioned in the first and second schedules respectively. *HIRJIBHAI CURSETJI BHANDUPWALA v. 14. — — — — — Act XXI of 1865, s. 8—Succession Act, s. 42—Advancement—Statute of Distribution.—In excluding, by s. 8 of the Parsi Succession Act, from application to Parsis, s. 42 of the Succession Act, which repeals the English rule as to advancement contained in the Statute of Distribution, s. 5, it was not the intention of the Legislature to preserve the last-mentioned rule in force for the Parsi community. DHANJIBHAI BOMMANJI GUGRAT v. NAVAZBAI I. L. R., 2 Bom., 75

15. — — — — — Parsi succession—Act XXI of 1865—Effect of words excluding from inheritance—Heir-at-law.—A, a Parsi inhabitant of Surat, died there on the 13th February 1879, leaving him surviving the following relations, viz.: A daughter J (the respondent) by his first wife, who had predeceased him; his second wife, Dhanbai, who lived apart from him; his third wife, who had been divorced by him, and whose son A did not recognize as his own; and his three sisters, D, S, and G, the first-named of whom had been married to K, and whose son E was the appellant. By his will A expressly directed that neither his daughter J nor his widow Dhanbai should take any share of his property, the whole of which he bequeathed to his brother R, who, however, predeceased him. On the 6th September 1879 J applied to the District Court of Surat that letters of administration to A's estate might be granted to her husband as her attorney, alleging that A died intestate. Her application was opposed by E, D, and S (the nephew and two sisters of A), on the ground that J was expressly excluded by A from inheriting his property, and that neither she nor her husband resided permanently within the Presidency of Bombay. The District Judge granted limited letters of administration to J's husband as her attorney, under s. 214 of Act X of 1865. On an appeal to the High Court by E alone,—Held that A had died intestate, not having made any bequest or devise of his property which could take effect, inasmuch as his sole devisee (R) had predeceased him, and that the estate must therefore go in accordance with the law of succession. The use of mere negative words, unaccompanied by any effective disposition of his property, could not exclude his daughter J or his widow Dhanbai from succeeding to their shares of the estate. Under the Parsi Succession Act (XXI of 1865), widows and children rank before brothers and

16. — — — — — Act XXI of 1865—Childless widow of intestate son of Parsi.—It is not a condition precedent to the application of s. 5 of Act XXI of 1865 that the predeceased son of an intestate Parsi shall have left a widow and issue. Where an intestate Parsi left him surviving a widow, sons, daughters, children of a predeceased son, and the widow of another predeceased son, who had died without issue and a posthumous daughter was afterwards born to the intestate,—Held that such last-mentioned widow was entitled to one moiety of the share in the intestate's estate which her husband would have taken had he survived the intestate, and that the other moiety of such share devolved on the surviving issue of the intestate, including the posthumous daughter, and the children of his other predeceased son. *MANOHERJI KAWASJI DAVUR v. 1. ——— Advocate General—Suit for account of endowed property on death of last surviving trustee.—Quare.—Whether the Advocate General must not be made a party in all cases where an account is sued for of property left by will to a charitable institution of which the last surviving trustee has died. Notice of the decree directed to be given to the Advocate General, in case he should think fit, on behalf of the Crown, to propose a scheme for the management of the charity. Powers of the Advocate General. THAKOOR DOSS SETH v. HOGE [Cor., 68]

2. ——— Suit to administer funds of Hindu charity.—A suit to administer the funds of a Hindu charity is properly brought in the name of the Advocate General, who should, however, only exercise a general control over such suit, and not interfere in the minute details of the religious charity to be administered. ADVOCATE GENERAL v. VISHVAKATH ATMARAM 1 Bom., Ap., 9

3. ——— Agents—Suit by agents brought in their own names.—All suits should be brought by the person or persons in whom the legal right of suit is vested, and not by agents in their own names. The objection that a suit is not so brought is an important one materially affecting the regularity of procedure. LALA MANOHUR DASS v. KISHEN DYAL [3 N. W., 175]

6. ——— Suit against agent—Liability of firm for act of gomashta.—A gomashta of a firm should not be sued in respect of a debt due from the firm even if he contracted it with authority. PHOOL CHUND v. SHIVA PERSHAD [2 Agra, Mls., 4]

7. ——— Gomashta—Recognized agent—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 13.—A gomashta holding a written authority from his employer, and suing for rent in the name and on behalf of the latter, should be admitted as the recognized agent of such employer within the meaning of s. 13, Bengal Act VIII of 1869. RAM LALL KURFURMA v. RAM TARUN KOONDOD 16 W. R., 254

8. ——— Bengal Rent Act, 1869, s. 32—Principal and agent—Plaintiff—Gomashta.—Under s. 32 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, a gomashta has no right to bring a suit in his own name. He can only sue in the name of his employer, and conduct the suit for him like any other agent. KOONJO BEHARY ROY v. POORNO CHUNDER CHATTERJEE 1 L. R., 9 Calc., 450; 12 C. L. R., 55

9. ——— Gomashta—Plaintiffs.—Where a gomashta sues on behalf of a firm, it was ordered that the parties themselves whom he represented should be made parties, and a guardian appointed for such of them as were minors. GOBIND DASS v. JAYKISHEN DASS 2 Agra, 101

10. ——— Suit by manager of indigo concern—Right to sue.—In an action brought by the manager of an indigo concern, on the basis of a contract executed by defendant and addressed to a previous manager, now deceased, it was held that, as the plaint did not disclose that the plaintiff had any interest of his own in the suit, and as the contract was not in terms with him personally, he could not maintain the action in his own name. GLASCOTT v. GOPAL SREEKH 9 W. R., 254

11. ——— Suit by Official Assignee—Agent of assignee.—In a suit by the Official Assignee of an Insolvent Court, such Official Assignee should be made the plaintiff, and the law then allows him to sue by his recognized agent; but the law does not allow the recognized agent to sue as plaintiff. In a suit so incorrectly instituted the plaint should be returned for amendment. CARTER v. MISSEK LAL 2 N. W., 179

12. ——— Agent suing instead of corporate body.—Where a corporate body—e.g., the East Indian Railway Company—is sued, not in its corporate capacity, but through an agent, the suit is brought in a wrong form. NUBREN CHUNDER PAUL v. STEPHENSON 15 W. R., 534

13. ——— Benamidars—Suit by benamidar—Acquiescence in, or waiver of, objection.—The real owner of property is the person who should institute a suit for it. A benami holder may sue as trustee on behalf of the beneficial owner, without disclosing the name of the real owner; and if the defendant does not object to the suit proceeding in that form, and raises no issue upon the real title of the plaintiff, the suit may proceed and be decided. PROSUNNO COOMAR ROY CHOWDHRY v. GOOROO CHURN SEIN. GOOROO CHURN SEIN v. OOOJULMONEE CHOWDHRAIN . . . 3 W. R., 159

14. Right of suit—Suit for declaration of title to, and for possession of, immoveable property—Disclaimer of real owner.—In a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's right by purchase to, and for possession of, certain immoveable property, it was found on the evidence that the plaintiff was merely a benamidar for one of the defendants, and had no right to the property. That defendant in his evidence disclaimed any title to the property. Held that the plaintiff had no right to sue, being a mere benamidar, and neither the disclaimer of the real owner, nor the fact that he was a party to the suit, was sufficient to enable the plaintiff to maintain the suit when instituted, or to entitle him to have the real owner added as a co-plaintiff. PROSUNNO COOMAR ROY CHOWDHRY v. GOOROO CHURN SEIN, 3 W. R., 159, followed. HARI GOBIND ADHIKARI v. AKHOY KUMAR MOZUMDAR . . . I. L. R., 16 Calc., 364

15. Suit for land sold in execution of decree—Actual purchaser.—In a suit for possession of land sold in execution of a decree by a person who claimed to have bought the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor in the land, but who, in fact, was not the real purchaser,—Held the suit must be dismissed because of the non-joinder as plaintiff of the real purchaser. KALLY PROSONNO BOSE v. DINOMATH MUKLICK [11 B. L. R., 56: 19 W. R., 434

16. Benami purchase—Suit for possession Real purchaser.—A suit for possession of property, which has been purchased benami, cannot be maintained in the name of the nominal purchaser; the real purchaser should be made a plaintiff in the suit. FUZELUN BEEBEE v. 18. Suit by benamidar.—A mortgage-bond was executed ostensibly in favour of R, but J was the real mortgagee. A suit was brought by R, the benamidar, to enforce the bond; J, the real mortgagee, made over the debt on a date previous to the suit, but executed the formal deed of assignment on a date subsequent thereto. Held that the benamidar might maintain the suit. BHOLA PERSHAD v. RAM LALL . I. L. R., 24 Calc., 34

19. Suit for foreclosure of mortgage—Beneficial owner not made a party—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). s. 85—Right of suit.—A suit for foreclosure of a mortgage may be brought by the person named in the mortgage deed as the mortgagee, although he was, in fact, only the benamidar of the beneficial owner; and such a suit should not be dismissed because the beneficial owner is not added as a party. SACHITANANDA MOHAPATRA v. HALORAM GORAIN [I. L. R., 24 Calc., 644

20. Suit for ejectment.—A mere benamidar cannot maintain a suit for ejectment, he having neither title to, nor possession of, the property. Hari Gobind Adhikari v. Akhoy Kumar Mozumdar, I. L. 31. ———— Suit for specific performance.—In a suit for specific performance of a contract,—Held that the principle laid down in the cases of DeHoughton v. Money, L. R., 2 Ch. App., 166, and Luckumsey Ookerda v. Fazulla Cassumbhoy, I. L. R., 5 Bom., 177,—viz., that a stranger to the contract cannot be a party to the suit,—is only applicable where from the plaintiff's case it appears that a third party, not a party to the contract, has a distinct interest from that of the other parties to the contract, which interest is sought to be declared null and void. MORUND LALL v. CHOTAY LALL
[I. L. R., 10 Cal., 1081]

32. ———— Suit by mortgagee without co-sharers.—Where a mortgage-bond was executed in favour of the plaintiff alone, the fact that there were other persons members of the joint family co-sharers with the plaintiff did not render it necessary to make them parties to a suit on the mortgage, as the plaintiff might be regarded as contracting on behalf of himself and the other members of the family as undisclosed principals. *BUNGSE SINGH v. factory, entered into an agreement, which (inter alia) provided that they should charge a uniform rate of R4-8-0 per palla for ginning cotton; that of this sum, R2-8-0 should be treated as the actual cost of ginning; and that the remaining R2 should be carried to a common fund, to be divided each year between the parties to the agreement in proportion to the number of ginning machines which each of them possessed. The agreement was to be in force for four years. The other parties had carried out the agreement, but the defendant, although he had carried the R2 to a separate account, refused to pay the plaintiff his share of the amount. He also refused to pay the other two parties their shares. The accounts had been duly made up, showing the sums which the defendant under the agreement had to pay both to the plaintiff and the two other parties to the agreement. The plaintiff sued the defendant for his share. The defendant contended that the plaintiff ought to have made the other parties to the agreement parties to the suit. Held that the other parties to the agreement were not necessary parties to the suit. The accounts had been made up and were admittedly correct, and they showed that the defendant had nothing to receive from any of the parties to the agreement, but that he was indebted in a definite sum to the plaintiff. HARIBHAI MANEKLAL v. situated, and that the talukh ceased to be held exclusively by the plaintiff, but was divided between him and certain other persons, who were not made parties to the suit. Held that all the co-sharers should have been joined as parties, and that, as this had not been done, the suit was bad. ORHOY GOVIND CHOWDHRY v. HURYCHURN CHOWDHRY

[I. L. R., 8 Calc., 277]

37. ——— Lease—Suit by one of several joint lessors for his share of rent.—One of several joint lessors of certain land sued the lessee for his share of the rent payable under the lease to all the lessors, making the other lessors defendants. Held that the suit was not maintainable, and the making of the other lessors defendants did not cure the defect in the suit. MANOHAR DAS v. MANZUR ALI . I. L. R., 5 All., 40

38. ——— Suit for ejectment—Landlord and tenant—Possession, suit for, by one of several proprietors.—The owners of a 13-anna share of a julkur sued to eject a lessee on his refusal to pay an enhanced rent. Held that he could not be ejected by a suit brought by one only of several proprietors. A lease granted by all the proprietors cannot be varied or terminated at the suit of one. BOLLYE SATEE v. AKRAM ALLY

[I. L. R., 4 Calc., 961]

39. ——— Suit for possession—Lessors.—Plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain land said to have been included in a talukh pottah given him by the zamindars, alleging that defendants were obstructing his possession. For the defence it was averred that these lands fell within a 9-anna share which belonged to one D, and that by process of sale they became the right of other parties under whom defendants held as lessees. Held that it was unnecessary to make the lessors on either side parties in the case. NAGUR CHAND v. DOORGA DASS CHOWDHRY . 11 W. R., 137

40. ——— Suit by co-sharer against mortgagee for share of profits—Act XIV of 1863, s. 1.—A co-sharer can only sue such persons in the Revenue Court, under cl. 2, s. 1, Act XIV of 1863, as are appointed or entitled by custom to make the collections of rent on behalf of the proprietary body of the estate or any part thereof, and who are bound to pay the revenue and village expenses, and to account to co-parceners for receipts and expenditure as their representatives. SREEN KISHEN v. 41. ——— Debtor and creditor, Suits between—Bond—Suit for a share of a debt—A, B, and C were uterine brothers, Mahomedans, to whom jointly a sum of money was due on a bond. A, the elder brother, sued the debtor for recovery of the debt, and, after successfully resisting the claim of B's widow to be made a party to the suit, obtained a decree for the principal and interest to the date of decree, together with subsequent interest and costs. A realized the decree for the principal and interest to the date of decree only. B's widow, on behalf of herself and two minor sons, sued A for the share of the decretal moneys which belonged to her husband's estate. She refused to join her daughters as parties. Held that she was entitled to recover a third share of the amount realized under A's decree, minus the share of her two daughters. NURUNNISSA v. ROUSHAN JAN 2 B. L. R., Ap., 1

42. ——— Trustees for benefit of creditors.—The creditor of an insolvent who has assigned all his property to trustees for the benefit of all his creditors generally sued him for his debt, joining the trustees as defendants, on the ground that they had refused to register his claim. Held that they were rightly joined as defendants in the suit. AJUDHIA NATH v. ANANT DAS [I. L. R., 3 All., 799]

43. ——— Suit by trustees of deed for benefit of creditors to set aside attachment.—To a suit by the trustees of an assignment for the benefit of his creditors by an insolvent trader to set aside an attachment by an execution-creditor who did not assent to the assignment, it is not necessary to make all the creditors parties. STEPHENSON v. BAUMGARTNER 3 Agra, 104

44. ——— Declaratory decrees—Suit to declare pottahs forgeries—Interested parties.—In a suit by a superior holder (representing the zamindar by whom certain pottahs were alleged to have been granted) for a declaration that the pottahs were forgeries, against a party holding a portion of land by a title derived from lessees under those pottahs, it was held that all the parties interested in, and holding under, the pottahs should be made parties to the suit, on the principle that all persons who are interested in the question must be made parties to a suit in a Court of equity. DUKHEENA MOHUN ROY v. AMERROODDEEN MAHOMED 12 W. R., 247

45. ——— Suit for declaration of right against proprietor—Agent.—In a suit for declaration of right against a proprietor of an estate, it is necessary that the proprietor himself, and not his karindah only, be made a party to the suit. A decree against the karindah cannot bind the proprietor. MADHO RAO APA v. THAKOOR PERSHAD 3 Agra, 127

46. ——— Ejectment, Suit for—Suit based on lease from Government—Government as party to suit.—If the plaintiff in an ejectment suit can make out a legal title to the land, he is entitled to maintain a suit against the person in actual juridical possession of such land for its recovery without making the person under whom the latter claims to hold a party to the suit. So where plaintiffs based their title to the land in dispute on a lease granted by Government giving occupancy right to their predecessor in title, and sued the defendants in ejectment, and the defendants claimed to hold the land under an occupancy title conferred on them by Government subsequent to the plaintiff's lease, it was held that, though Government might have properly been made a party so as to bind it by the decree and prevent future litigation,

49. ——— Suit to redeem lands belonging to temple—Agent—Persons in whom temple is vested.—Plaintiff, alleging himself to be "karaima samudayam" of the Malamal Ayyappan devaswam, sued to redeem lands which had been mortgaged by the devaswam. Held that he was not entitled to maintain the suit; that the uralers are the persons in whom the estate and property of the temple is vested, and that the plaintiff was an agent accountable to the uralers and subject to be dismissed by them for misconduct. KUNJUNNEBI NAMBIAR v. 53. ——— Executors—Will—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870)—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 179—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 4—Hindu will made outside Bombay relating to property situate partly within and partly outside Bombay—Probate of such will, Effect of—Representation of the estate.—One L died at Surat in 1873, possessed of ancestral property situate partly in Bombay and partly in the Surat district. He left a widow, B, and a minor son, M. At his death he made a will bequeathing his property to his son, and appointing certain executors to manage the property during the son's minority. The son died in 1877, leaving a minor widow, N. In 1879 one of the executors obtained probate of L's will from the High Court. In 1884 a suit was filed, on behalf of the minor N, against her mother-in-law, B, to recover possession of the property covered by the will of L. One of the defences to the suit was that the property in dispute had vested in the executor, who had obtained probate of the will, and that, as the defendant held the estate under the executor, the suit was not maintainable without impleading the executor. Held that the executor was not a necessary party to the suit. S. 179 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) as incorporated into the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) did not apply so far as it related to property outside Bombay. The property in dispute was situated in the Surat district. It was joint ancestral property. On the father's death, it vested in the son by survivorship, and on the son's death, it vested in the son's widow, the plaintiff in the present suit. Under the provisions, therefore, of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 4 (if that Act can be held to operate at all in the mofussil before a notification is issued under s. 2), the estate could not vest in the executor, as it had passed by survivorship to another person long before the Act came into operation. BAI HARKOR v. 62. Suit to set aside sale for arrears of revenue—Secretary of State for India—Res judicata.—A Collector had sold an estate, purporting to act under Act XI of 1859, for a supposed arrear of revenue. There was, however, only an erroneous debit in the Collectorate books against the estate, in excess of the revenue actually assessed upon it, chargeable against it, and due from it. In a suit brought to set aside the sale in the Courts below, the Government had been made co-defendants, but were not respondents, on this appeal; and the objection was taken, on the argument of this appeal, and by previous petition, that they should be made parties, respondents. Held that it was a mistaken view that a decree annulling the sale in this suit would be res judicata in any future question or proceeding, as between the Government and the unsuccessful purchaser. The Secretary of State for India, therefore, was not a necessary respondent. His position was correctly explained in Bal Mokoond Lal v. Jirjudhun Roy, I. L. 66. Suit for possession and declaration of right to participate in a permanent settlement of a mahal resumed under Reg. II of 1819.—Chur land was held by the proprietors of the adjoining estate. The chur was resumed by Government in 1835, and declared to be liable to assessment under Regulation II of 1819. The recorded proprietors of the adjoining permanently-settled estate, to which the chur was a contiguous accretion, refused to make a permanent settlement with Government at the rent demanded. The chur was then held khas by Government for some time, and subsequently leased out for temporary periods to strangers. In these temporary leases Government reserved the proprietor's rights to come in and take a permanent settlement on the expiry of the temporary settlements, and also reserved an allowance of 10 per cent. on the rent as malikanah on their account, which sum had been kept in deposit in the Collectorate treasury. In 1867 the Government made a permanent settlement with the defendant, one of the recorded proprietors of the contiguous estate, of the entire chur, and refused the application of other shareholders in the estate to be joined in the settlement. The Collector, at the request of the defendant, applied the deposit in his treasury in satisfaction of the Government revenue. An unsuccessful shareholder brought a civil suit against the defendant for possession, and a declaration of his right to participate in the settlement. Held that it was not necessary to make the Government a party. KRISHNA CHANDRA SANDYAL CHOWDHRY v. Neither H N, nor any one representing him, had been made a party to the suit. Court, Held that the defendant was entitled to have the plaintiff's uncle and minor brother placed on the record either as co-plaintiffs or as defendants. The right of a plaintiff to assume the character of manager and to sue in that character raises a question of fact and law which varies as the other members of the family are minors or adults, and therefore the defendant is always entitled in such suits, when the objection is taken at an early stage, to have the other members of the family, when they are known, placed on the record, to ensure him against the possibility of the plaintiffs acting without authority. S. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act lays down only a rule of procedure; and the words "all person" in the section could have hardly been intended to include a Mitakshara son—much less a minor son—in a suit where the father is sued in his representative capacity. *Suraj Bansi Koer v. 85. Contract made by member of joint family in individual capacity—Right to sue alone.—The firm of S. & Co., the partners of which were W S and F E, took a contract from Government on 12th November 1877 to construct a barrel-house at the Gunpowder Manufactory at Kirkee; and on the 28th November 1877 the plaintiff agreed to advance money "up to Rs15,000" for the purpose of enabling the firm to carry out the contract. Under the agreement, the plaintiff was to receive all sums to become due from the Government on the contractors' bills, and to pay the balance to the firm after repaying himself all advances with interest. On the same day the firm executed a power-of-attorney to the plaintiff, authorizing him to receive from the Government Engineer all such sums to become due to the firm under the contract, which power-of-attorney was deposited by plaintiff in the office of the Executive Engineer at Poona. In March or April 1878 W S left for England, up to which time Rs34,900 had been advanced by the plaintiff, and a balance of Rs14,942-5-10 still remained due to him after giving credit for the sums received on the bills passed by the Executive Engineer. On 24th July 1878 the plaintiff entered into a fresh agreement with F E similar to the former one, to make further advances to the firm up to Rs16,000 in addition to Rs15,000 on the same terms as those mentioned in the previous agreement; and by means of these advances the contract was completed at the end of 1879. In 1878 the defendant obtained a decree against W S and attached the right, title, and interest of W S in a sum of Rs5,034-11-9 in the hands of the Executive Engineer, which was then due to the firm on the contract. The plaintiff, who alleged that Rs13,700-1-11 were due to him from the firm, applied to have the attachment removed, which application was refused on 30th September 1879, and the sum attached was paid to the defendant. The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover from him Rs5,034-11-9. Held that, although the plaintiff might be a member of an undivided Hindu family, still, as the contract was entered into with the plaintiff in his individual capacity, and as there was nothing on the face of the contract to show that the plaintiff was acting on behalf of the family, the plaintiff was entitled to sue alone. JAGABHAI LALLUBHAI v. of the note, sole surviving partner of the firm, Held that a Hindu infant, who by birth or inheritance becomes entitled to an interest in a joint family business, does not necessarily become a member of the trading partnership carrying on the business. There must be some consentient act to that effect on the part of the infant and his partners. Even, therefore, where parties are governed by the Mitakshara law, an infant need not be joined as a co-plaintiff in a suit by the father to recover a trade debt. Subsequently to the granting of the said lease, viz., on the 1st September 1883, P conveyed her equal and undivided moiety of the said property to the plaintiff. On the 30th January 1886, i.e., a month before the expiration of the lease, the plaintiff gave the defendant notice to determine the tenancy, and required him to quit on the 1st March then next. M brought a suit against the executors of K's will, which was compromised on the payment by them to her of a certain sum. This sum she deposited with N, one of the members of a firm, to be invested in N's own name, he paying her such interest as it yielded him. On the dissolution of the firm, the sum deposited by M was made over to N alone, and on the death of N, his estate, and with it the sum deposited by M, came into the hands of the sons of N. On the death of M, the plaintiff and two others were the heirs of K. In a suit brought by the plaintiff against the sons of N for a third share of the sum deposited by M,—Held that such a suit was not a "suit for a distributive share under an intestacy, or of a legacy under a will," within s. 32, Act IX of 1850. All the parties claiming to be entitled to any interest in the sum deposited should have been made parties to the suit. HARAN CHANDRA MOOKERJEE v. NANDAGOPAL MUTYLALL . 13 B. L. R., 142; 22 W. 103. ————— Suit for redemption—Parties to such suit—Equity of redemption, Interest, of person related to the mortgagor.—The plaintiff sued the defendant to redeem certain khoti lands mortgaged by the plaintiff's father to the defendant's uncle. The defendant objected that the separated uncle and cousins of the plaintiff should be made co-plaintiffs in the suit. These relations of the plaintiff were not joint members of the plaintiff's family at the time of the mortgage, nor did they claim any interest in the equity of redemption. Held that the plaintiff's uncle and cousins were not necessary parties. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it must be presumed that the mortgage was made by the plaintiff's father in his individual capacity. If the defendant had shown that, at the date of the mortgage, the plaintiff's father and uncles were undivided, it might have been presumed that the mortgage was on their behalf as well as on his own. But this the defendant had failed to do. The mortgage did not purport to have been made by the plaintiff's father as manager of the family, nor did it appear that the plaintiff's uncle and cousins claimed any interest in the equity of redemption. The mere fact of their relationship gave them no interest in it. RAGHO VINAYAK v. DAUD I. L. R., 13 Bom., 51

several mortgagors—Adverse possession—Limitation.—The plaintiff sought to recover his father's share in two portions of family property, one of which had been mortgaged by the plaintiff's father and the father of the defendant No. 1 jointly; the other had been mortgaged by the plaintiff's father jointly with the father of defendant No. 1 and the husband of defendant No. 2. The first was redeemed by the father of defendant No. 1 alone in 1868; the second was redeemed by the defendant No. 1 more than twelve years before the suit. The parties were Mahomedans, and the plaintiff had a brother and three sisters, only one of whom (defendant No. 2) was a party to the suit. Defendant No. 1 contended that the suit was defective for want of parties, and that it was time-barred. The Subordinate Judge awarded the plaintiff's claim. The Assistant Judge on appeal held that the plaintiff's brothers and sisters were necessary parties, but that it was too late to join them, the suit with regard to them having become barred by limitation. He therefore dismissed the suit. On second appeal,—Held by the High Court that all persons interested in a property, which it is sought to redeem or recover on payment of a charge, are necessary parties, as otherwise the possessor may be exposed to many suits upon the same cause of action. Held also that the plaintiff's brother and sisters ought to have been joined as co-plaintiffs, the defendant No. 1's possession after redemption not being adverse to them. If it was adverse at all, it was adverse to the whole of the plaintiff's branch of the family, so as to bar the right of the group altogether. But that was no reason why the co-owners should not be admitted as co-plaintiffs, and the suit go on upon its merits. BHAUDIN v. ISMAIL . . . I. L. R., 11 Bom., 425

Government sold A's interest in the twelfth share, which was purchased at the sale by B's son, E. In a suit brought by C against B to obtain possession of A's share,—Held that E, to whom only the equity of redemption passed by the purchase at the Government sale, was necessarily a party to the suit, which was accordingly remitted to the Court below, in order that he might be made a defendant, and a new decree passed upon the merits. *YASHAVANT SUBAJI KULKARNI v. 113. — Right to sale—Death of sole mortgagee leaving several heirs—Sale of mortgagee's rights by one of such heirs—Suit by purchaser for sale of mortgaged property—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 67.—Upon the death of a sole mortgagee of zamindari property, his estate was divided among his heirs, one of whom, a son, was entitled to fourteen out of thirty-two shares. The son executed a sale-deed whereby he conveyed the mortgagee's rights under the mortgage to another person. In a suit for sale brought against the mortgagor by the representative of the purchaser, it was found that the plaintiff acquired, under the deed of sale, only the rights in the mortgage of the son of the mortgagee, though the deed purported to be an assignment of the whole mortgage. Held by the Full Bench that the plaintiff was not entitled, in respect of his own share, to maintain the suit for sale against the whole property, the other parties interested not having been joined. *PARSOTAM SARAN v. 114. — First and second mortgages—Second mortgagee not made party to suit by first mortgagee for sale of mortgaged property—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 85—Notice.—Certain immovable property was mortgaged in 1865 to H, in 1871 to G, and in 1873 again to H. In 1883 the property was purchased by M, the representative of G, in execution of a decree obtained in 1877 by G in a suit for sale brought by him upon the mortgage of 1871. To this suit and decree the mortgagee under the deeds of 1865 and 1873 was not a party. In 1885 M sued the representatives of H for redemption of the mortgage of 1865. One of the defendants pleaded that, as he was a puisne incumbrancer in the property in suit at the time of the plaintiff's suit against the mortgagors in 1877, he ought to have been made a party to that suit, and thus afforded an "opportunity of protecting his rights by payment of the mortgage-money." He did not in the Court below ask in express terms to be allowed to redeem the plaintiff's mortgage, but he did so in appeal to the High Court. Held, with reference to the terms of s. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, that, inasmuch as the defendant was in possession of the mortgaged property at the time of the suit of 1877, and his mortgage was a registered instrument, it must be presumed that

It appeared that the third mortgagor, as a witness, renounced interest in the greater part of the mortgaged premises. They again mortgaged the same property to X on the 23rd February 1884. On the 6th August 1885 A mortgaged a portion of the said property to Y. On the 12th August 1885 B mortgaged a portion of the same property to X. On the 21st August 1885 A mortgaged a portion of the same property to Z, and Z's mortgage was registered. On the 20th September 1886, A and B sold to X the property mortgaged to him, and with the proceeds of that sale X's three mortgages were paid off. On the 8th January 1887 Y sued A, B, and X for cancellation of the deed of sale of the 20th September 1886, and for sale of the property mortgaged to him under his deed of the 6th August 1885. Y did not make Z a party to this suit. He did not ask for redemption of X's mortgages nor for foreclosure of Z's mortgage. Held that, Z's mortgage of the 21st August 1885 having been registered, Y must be taken to have had notice of it, and, having had notice thereof, was bound to make Z a party to the suit for sale under his (Y's) mortgage. Damodar Dev Chand v. In a suit brought in 1890 against the defendants to set aside the patni and for khas possession of K, it was found that the plaintiff had notice of the patni. Held that the defendants as patnidars had an interest in K within the meaning of s. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, and should therefore have been made parties to the suit in 1885, and thereby given an opportunity of redeeming the mortgage on which that suit was brought. *Kokil Singh v. 122. Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 85—Mortgage suit against Hindu mortgagor and two sons—Sale of mortgage premises—Subsequent suit for share of a third son.—A Hindu, having three sons, executed a mortgage in favour of the defendants, who subsequently obtained a decree for sale on the mortgage and brought the property to sale in execution and purchased it themselves, the mortgagor and two only of his sons being brought on to the record. It did not appear whether the plaintiffs in that suit were aware of the interest of the third son, who now sued to recover his one-quarter share of the mortgage premises claiming that the previous proceedings were not binding on him and alleging that the mortgage was unsupported by consideration. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to have the question tried, whether there was really a debt owing by the father to support the mortgage. Quare—Whether *Bhawani Prasad v. At the time of the suit there was subsisting on the same property a prior mortgage held by one D P. D P was not made a party to that suit. After the decree in that suit was passed, but before execution, D P brought a suit for sale on his mortgage, but did not make the second mortgagees parties to that suit. In that suit D P

Held (not following the decision of the majority of the Full Bench in *Bhavani Prasad v. Kallu, I. L. 129. ———— Mortgage by such guardian without Court's permission—Validity of such mortgage—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 85.—A was the owner of the property in dispute. He mortgaged it with possession to defendant No. 1 in 1884. A died leaving an adopted son Vithal, a minor. Thereupon one Vasudev was appointed by the District Court to be guardian of the person and property of the minor under Act XX of 1864. In September 1890 Vasudev mortgaged the same property to plaintiff with the sanction of the Subordinate Judge's Court obtained under s. 305 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). In 1895 the plaintiff as second mortgagee brought this suit to redeem the earlier mortgage of 1884. Held that such mortgage was only voidable under s. 80 of Act VIII of 1890 at the instance of any other person affected thereby. Held further that defendant No. 1, the original mortgagee, was not affected by the plaintiff's mortgage, and that the only person really affected by that mortgage was Vithal, the owner of the equity of redemption, who was a necessary party to the suit. *DATTARAM v. 141. ————— Suit against widow of insolvent as his legal representative—Form of decree.—The husband of the defendant was adjudicated an insolvent in 1891, and the usual order was made vesting his estate in the Official Assignee. He subsequently died without having filed his schedule, and no schedule had ever been filed. After his death, a suit was brought by a creditor against the defendant as the "widow, heiress, and legal representative" of the deceased insolvent, in which suit a decree was made against her, "the amount to be levied out of the assets of the deceased in her hands." In an application by the defendant to have the decree set aside on the grounds that the Official Assignee was a necessary party to the suit, and that the decree should have been against him as her husband's representative as his estate was in his lifetime, and since had continued to be vested in the Official Assignee,—Held that the Official Assignee was not a necessary party to the suit. The Official Assignee is not a necessary party to any suit to recover a money debt from a person who is either an insolvent at the time the suit is instituted or becomes insolvent pending the suit. But a decree made against an insolvent under such circumstances should be restricted in form so as not to allow the judgment-creditor by means of execution to obtain an advantage over the general body of creditors. *In re Hunt Monnet & Co.; Ex-parte Gamble v. 147. ——— Suit for partition and to set aside order disallowing objection to attachment—Purchaser or mortgagee of a co-parcener's share.—In a partition suit all persons interested in the property to be divided must be brought before the Court. A purchaser or mortgagee of a co-parcener's share in the joint property is a proper, and even necessary, party to a suit for partition. A, B, and C were members of a joint Hindu family. In execution of a decree against B, a portion of the family property was attached. Thereupon A intervened and objected to the attachment so far as his own share was concerned. The objection was disallowed, and the property was brought to sale and purchased by D. A then filed a suit (1) to set aside the order in the miscellaneous proceedings disallowing his objection to the attachment; and (2) for a partition of the whole family property. In this suit he impleaded not only his co-sharers B and C, but also D, the auction-purchaser, and E, a mortgagee of B's share in the joint property. The Subordinate Judge, holding that the suit was bad for misjoinder of parties as well as of causes of action, returned the plaint for amendment by striking out the prayer for partition. On appeal, this order was confirmed by the District Judge. On A's application to the High Court under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, Held that the suit was not bad either for misjoinder of parties or for misjoinder of causes of action. Treating the suit as one for partition, the auction purchaser D and the mortgagee E were proper, and even necessary, parties. If A established his right to partition, he would be entitled to have the order in the miscellaneous proceedings set aside in the same suit. SADU BIN BAGHU v. RAM BIN GOVIND

Surviving partners cannot be made co-defendants with the executors in such a suit merely by reason of their partnership. They can be made co-defendants in certain special cases, as where the relation between the executors or administrators of the deceased partner and the surviving partners is such as to present a substantial impediment to the prosecution by the executors or administrators of the rights of the parties interested in the estate against the surviving partners. *ELIAS v. 155. — Plaintiffs—Partnership-debt—Suit by sole surviving partner—Representatives of deceased partner—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 45—Civil Procedure Code, s. 26.—The rule of English law that, in trading partnerships, although the right of a deceased partner devolves on his representative, the remedy survives to his co-partner, who alone must enforce the right by action, and is liable on recovery to account to the representative for the deceased's share, should be applied in India, in the absence of statutory authority to the contrary. The effect of s. 45 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) is to extend the English law applicable to trading partnerships to all cases of partnership. There is nothing either in that section nor in s. 26 of the Civil Procedure Code, read with it, to show that the representatives of a deceased partner must be joined in an action for a partnership-debt brought by the surviving partner, though it may be that they might be joined in such an action. *GOBIND PRASAD v. 168. ——— Suit to recover possession under Specific Relief Act, s. 9—Necessary parties—Principal and agent—Suit for ejectment by party dispossessed.—The plaintiffs sued, under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), to recover possession of certain land which, they alleged, had been in their possession since 1856. They alleged that, while retaining possession of the said land through care-takers appointed by them, they had been in the habit of yearly selling the grass of the land to purchasers who themselves cut the grass so purchased; that in 1878 the grass of the land for the ensuing year was sold to T; that in the month of August 1879 the defendants forcibly dispossessed the plaintiffs of the said land, and prevented them and their servants and T from entering the same. Defendant No. 2 denied the dispossession, and disclaimed any interest in the land. Defendants Nos. 1 and 3 denied that the land in question belonged to the plaintiffs, and alleged that it was the property of A, of whom defendant No. 1 was manager, and No. 3 the lessee of the said land. They also alleged that the plaintiffs had tried to take forcible possession of the said land, and that defendant No. 1, acting on A's behalf, prevented them. They submitted that A was a necessary party to the suit. Held that the three defendants were properly made parties to the suit, and that A was not a necessary party. Defendant No. 1 (the lessee) had the physical occupation of the land sued for; but all three defendants, not having made any declaration, in taking possession, that it was taken for one or two of their number, acquired it jointly, and handed on a derivative possession to the actual occupant, which as against third parties ranked as their own. If it was properly assumed, they all had a right to defend it; if not, they might all be called on for restitution. As to A, he was not actually in possession, and had taken no personal part in the dispossession. He was said to be owner, but that did not imply that he committed the alleged acts of defendants, or insisted on his ownership. As he had not the physical possession of the land, it could not be assumed that he had the jural possession merely on the assertion of the defendants. He therefore, having done no palpable wrong, was not a necessary party. Held also that defendant No. 2 was properly made a defendant, and that, in case the dispossession should be established, he should be retained as a defendant notwithstanding his disclaimer. It was possible that No. 3 held the land on terms beneficial to No. 2, and the disclaimer in the present suit would not estop No. 2 from enforcing these terms in a subsequent suit against No. 3. Where under a contract between A and B an exclusive occupation of immovable property is given to A, he is the proper plaintiff in a suit for possession brought under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877). If B desires to sue immediately on the possessory right, he should sue in A's name, though for an injury to the reversion he (B) may properly sue in his own name. The intention of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 9, is not to be frustrated by any private arrangement under which the ejector has acted, or by which he may consent to hold on behalf of some other person. As between him and that person, his possession may be that of an agent, but to the former holder he is the dispossession: possession derived from him cannot be superior to his, and (the right of suit being given in general terms) is equally subject as his, to the result of proceedings taken within the prescribed six months. A person who has been ejected from his property, in suing to recover it under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), may sue the actual ejector, or the person under whose orders or by whose authority the actual ejector has acted, or he may sue both; but the wrongdoer who has taken possession is the one from whom primarily it is to be reclaimed. If a third party desire to maintain the expulsion as an act done on his behalf, it is for him to come forward and avow it. He may claim to be admitted as a defendant; but if he had himself a right to do what his agent had done, his right and his authority may be pleaded by the agent, and will be an effectual answer. The alleged owner or principal therefore is not a necessary party for the protection of the agent. The suit against the latter will fail if he acted on due authority where that authority is shown. VIRJIVANDAS MADHAVDAS v. MAHOMED ALI KHAN. I. L. R., 5 Bom., 208

174. — Suit by auction-purchaser at sale for arrears of revenue to annul incumbrance—Act XI of 1859, s. 37.—When an estate sold for arrears of revenue is recorded in a separate number in the Collector's rent-roll with a separate revenue assessed upon it and the specification in the sale certificate shows that the estate sold was an entire estate, the mere fact of a portion of the lands of that estate being joint with those of certain other estates cannot stand in the way of its having an entire estate within the meaning of s. 37 of Act XI of 1859. In a suit by a purchaser of such an estate at a sale for arrears of revenue to avoid an under-tenure, Held that the proprietors of the other estates to which the land in dispute partly appertained were not necessary parties, inasmuch as what the plaintiffs really asked for was not direct or actual possession of the land, but indirect or constructive possession by receipt of rent to the extent of their share from the cultivating tenants, upon a declaration that the intermediate tenure was cancelled by the sale for arrears of revenue. KAMAL KUMARI CHOWDHURANI v. 182. Question of title.
—In a suit for rent against a raiyat, the defendant contended that the plaintiff had no interest in the tenure and had never received rent from him, but that he had paid rent to a third party. Held that the third party might be added as an intervenor in order to try the question who was actually the beneficial owner of the tenure and entitled to the rent. RADHAMONEE v. 183. Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 31.—In a suit for rent, where an intervenor on his own account, who pleads a deposit in Court made under Bengal Act VIII of 1869, is made a defendant by the Court, the fact of his being a defendant does not give rise to any equity as between the plaintiff and the other defendants so as to allow them to have the advantage of s. 31, Bengal Act VIII of 1869, although, if the intervenor had been sued jointly with the other defendants, they might have had the benefit of it. GIRDHAREE LALL SINGH PASBAN v. 21 W. R., 277

184. Question of title.
—In a suit for rent, an intervenor who claims to have acquired a share of the property for which the rent is claimed, may be made a defendant at the discretion of the Court. If a question of title legitimately arises between the parties to a rent suit, the Court is not compelled to dismiss the suit, but is bound to determine the question for the purposes of the suit. CHOWRASEE KOOR v. party, and alleges that he holds under and pays rent to him, such third party ought not to be made a party to the suit, so as to convert a simple suit for arrears of rent into one for the determination of the title to the property in respect of which the rent is claimed. Such a suit raises only two issues, viz.—(1) Does the relation of landlord and tenant exist between the plaintiff and defendant? (2) Are the alleged arrears of rent due and unpaid? And these are questions in which the plaintiff and defendant are alone concerned, and no third party claiming a title adverse to the plaintiff can properly be made a party to the trial of these issues. S. 28 of the Civil Procedure Code is not imperative, but allows a discretion to be exercised; and in such a suit it is better, both in the interests of Government and for the proper adjudication of the question of title, that it should be tried by a competent Court in a suit directly framed and brought for that purpose. LODAI MOLEAH v. KALLY DASS ROY

186. Question of title.
—An intervenor in a suit for rent has no right to be made a defendant, or to introduce into the suit an entirely new issue, e.g., one concerning title between himself and the plaintiff; still less is he entitled singly to appeal against the judgment in the case. BIRESSUR PANNEY v. 187. Adding parties in rent suits.—Where Act X of 1859, s. 77, was no longer in force, the effect of adding a party under Act VIII of 1859, s. 73, in a rent suit was the same as in any other kind of suit. Whatever be the class of suit, the party added cannot raise an issue which would entirely change the nature and scope of the suit; the Court being bound to limit its inquiry to the issues necessary in order to try the plaintiff's right to the special relief sought;—e.g., where the relief sought is the recovery of arrears of rent, the intervenor is competent to raise all questions, whether of title or otherwise, which bear upon the issue, is the plaintiff entitled to recover the rent claimed? TILLESSURE KOOR v. 189. Question of benami title.—Plaintiff, who derived title from A, who was the ostensible purchaser of certain immovable property at an auction sale in execution of a decree against B, brought a suit to recover the rent of such property from the talukhdars. The appellant was allowed to intervene, alleging that A was the benamidar of a third person from whom he himself had purchased the property. The lower Court, however, refused to try the question of benami as not being admissible in a rent suit. On appeal, the Judge tried the question of title. Held that the Judge was wrong in raising the question of title at all, and thus proceeding on a basis other than that on which, whether right or wrong, the parties had chosen to litigate the matter, and which the original Court had accepted. Quare.—Is the Munsif's procedure in this case the right one, now that Act X of 1859, s. 77, has been repealed, and not re-enacted in the new law? AULUCK MONKE DEBEE v. Rent Act (XII of 1881), s. 148—Landholder and tenant—Suit for rent where the right to receive it is disputed—Third person who has received rent made party—Jurisdiction of Rent Court to pass decrees for rent against such party—Question of title.—In a suit by a landholder for recovery of rent, the defendants pleaded that they had paid the rent to a co-sharer of the plaintiff. The co-sharer made a deposition, in which he alleged that he was entitled to the rent not only as a co-sharer, but also as the appointed agent of the plaintiff. The Court thereupon made him a party to the suit under s. 148 of the Rent Act, and passed a joint decree against him and the tenants for rent. Held that the Court was justified in making him a party under s. 148 of the Rent Act, but was not competent to pass a decree for rent against him. A party, who is brought in under s. 148 of the Rent Act, cannot be made subject to the decree for rent so as to allow execution to be taken out against him, whether his bona fide receipt and enjoyment of the rent is proved or not. The only person against whom such a decree can be passed is the tenant. Madho Prasad v. Ambay, I. L. R., 5 All., 503, referred to. Per Edg., C.J.—Semble—That the intention of the Legislature in allowing a third person who claims under s. 148 of the Rent Act to be made a party to the suit may possibly have been that, by bringing him in, he may be bound by a declaration in the suit that he had, in fact, received the rent, so as to prevent him in the civil suit from denying the fact that he had received it. In a suit by a landholder for recovery of rent in which a third person alleged to have received such rent is made a party under s. 148 of the N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), the question of title to receive the rent cannot be determined between the plaintiff and such person, but can only be litigated and determined in a subsequent suit in the Civil Court. The only question between the plaintiff and the person so made a party which can be determined in the Rent Court under s. 148 is the actual receipt and enjoyment of the rent. *GOBIND RAM v. Whilst this suit was pending, certain parties intervened and asked to be made parties under s. 73, Code of Civil Procedure, on the ground that plaintiffs' vendors were not entitled to the full share claimed, as they themselves had purchased a portion thereof. Held that the Court exercised a wise and proper discretion in allowing the intervenors to be made parties, for a decree in plaintiffs' favour, though not legally binding on them, would nevertheless have caused them great difficulty in all matters of rent. *SALIGRAM SINGH v. 200. ——— Right of reversioner to sue for declaratory decree.—A polliam was granted to a Hindu on service tenure, and the last male holder died in 1860 leaving him surviving a widow K, and a daughter C. In 1865 the Government discontinued the service, and in lieu thereof and of the reversionary interest of the Crown imposed a quit-rent, and an inam pottah was issued to K by the inam Commissioner by which her title to the estate was acknowledged by the Government, and the estate was confirmed to her as her absolute property subject to the quit-rent. In 1882 C and her minor son A sued K and others to whom K had

The vendee sued the minor by his mother and guardian ad litem for specific performance of the contract and for possession, and joined as a defendant a subsequent purchaser from the mother and guardian. Held that, as the cause of action (the right to obtain a sale-deed and possession) concerned both the defendants, and entitled the plaintiff to relief against both, the purchaser was rightly joined as a party. *Luckamsey Ookerda v. The contract contained a covenant on the part of the plaintiff to build a temple and to secure an annuity to the vendor and his wife. On the 21st of the same month the first defendant sold and conveyed the same house to the second defendant and put him in possession. The other defendants were sureties for C P B. A suit was brought in the Court of the Deputy Collector against those who were actually in possession of the land, together with the sureties, for arrears of rent. It did not appear from the lease how far each defendant was interested in or entitled under it. Held by both Judges that the suit should be dismissed as against the sureties, who could not as such be sued under Act X of 1859. ROY PRIYANATH CHOWDERY v. In 1884 A alone advanced moneys on the security of usufructuary mortgages which were likewise taken in the name of B. A died leaving three sons, of whom the plaintiffs were two. The plaintiffs, having become divided from their brother, now brought suits in 1894 against B and the mortgagors for a declaration of their rights to the mortgages and for possession of the documents and for rent of the land which had been collected by B. It appeared that there had been no denial of the plaintiffs' rights before 1889, that no rent had been collected for several years before suit, the mortgagors who had remained in possession as lessees after the execution of the mortgages having refused to attorn to B. Held that the suits were not bad for the non-joinder of the plaintiffs' brother. MAHABALA BHATT v. 211. ——— Trusts Act (II of 1882), s. 56—Suit by two out of eleven beneficiaries for possession of trust property—Maintainability of suit—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 271.—Two daughters of a testator sued defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the testator's sons and his administrators with the will annexed, and other defendants, for a declaration that certain properties devised by the testator to be held in trust and the rents divided among his eleven children were trust properties, and to recover possession thereof. A decree had been obtained against plaintiff No. 2 and her right, title, and interest in the trust property brought to sale. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had filed a suit to set aside the sale, but afterwards compromised it on the terms that the sale should be cancelled on payment of a certain sum by defendant No. 1, but that, in default of such payment, the decree should take effect. Default having been made, the property was sold. Held (by the whole Court) that the decree of the Court below awarding the plaintiffs possession of the whole property on behalf of themselves and the other beneficiaries must be reversed. Per BODDAM, J.—That the alienations made in pursuance of the compromise entered into by the administrators were binding upon the plaintiffs, and that therefore neither of them had any cause of action. Per O'FARRELL, J.—That under all the circumstances the suit could not be treated as a suit to recover the plaintiffs' shares of the trust property. Per SUBRAMANIA AYYAR, J. (dissentiente)—The fact that the plaintiffs had asked for a larger relief than they were entitled to did not warrant the dismissal of the suit altogether; and that the suit fell within the class of cases in which relief against a third party is such as a Court of equity will administer, and a cestui qui trust may be entitled to sue the trustees

The suit was afterwards withdrawn as against the trustee and a consent decree obtained, which, amongst other things, declared the trust deed to be not binding on any party. Subsequently an application was made to set aside the consent decree, and notice of motion was given to the trustee. She appeared on the motion, but on some of the parties objecting, the lower Court refused to hear her. Held that the trustee was entitled to appear and be heard on the motion as a necessary party. NUNDA LAL BOSE v. 219. ——— Non-joinder of parties—Civil Procedure Codes (Act VIII of 1869 and X of 1877), s. 30—Representatives of a certain caste—Chitpavans.—Four persons of the Chitpavan caste brought a suit in 1876, alleging that they and the members of their caste, in common with certain other castes, possessed the exclusive right of entry and worship in the sanctuary of a temple, and that the defendants, members of the Palase caste, not being of the privileged castes, infringed that right in 1871 and thereafter by entering the sanctuary and performing worship therein. They prayed for a declaration of their right and an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with it. Held that the plaintiffs could maintain the suit for the personal injury alleged to have been suffered by themselves by the pollution of their sanctuary, whether under the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 or that of 1877, s. 30 of the latter being merely regulative, not constitutive. Whether or not it could be contended that they and the defendants so represented their respective castes that the decree in this suit should bind all members of the two castes, would be open to

222. Malabar law—Joinder of parties—Suit for cancellation of deeds—Declaratory suit—Withdrawal of part of claim.—A and B, junior members of a Malabar tarwad, sued to cancel certain mortgages executed by their karnavan and senior anandravan, on the ground that the secured debt was not binding on the tarwad, and to appoint A to the office of karnavan. The last part of the prayer was withdrawn. The mortgages were executed to secure a decree-debt, the decree having been passed ex-parte against the late karnavan of the tarwad. No fraud was alleged, but the lower Courts found that the karnavan had been guilty of fraud in allowing the decree to be passed ex-parte. The plaintiffs had not been parties to the decree, and the other junior members of the tarwad, who had been joined, were exempted from liability. Held per curiam.—All the members of the plaintiffs' tarwad should have been joined actually or constructively under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code. MOIDEN KUTTI v. KRISHNAN

223. Irregularity in civil case.—The plaintiffs were fishermen belonging to the village of N. They claimed in this suit for themselves and the other fishermen of their village the exclusive right of fishing in the Negothna creek, between high and low water mark, within certain limits set forth in the plaint, and under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act they sought to recover possession of that right from the defendants, who, they contended, had dispossessed them within six months before suit. It was contended by the defendants that the plaintiffs, who claimed on behalf of other fishermen of the village, should have proceeded under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). Held that the objection was a good one; but, inasmuch as it was still open to the defendants to establish their right by a regular suit, their irregularity in the present suit was not such as to call for the exercise of the powers of the High Court under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code. 224. Representation of numerous plaintiffs—Advertisement—Community of interest—Decree for management of a Hindu temple—Application for execution by person interested.—In a suit by certain Tengalai Brahmans for declarations as to the mode of electing dharmakartas of a certain pagoda, etc., an order was made for a proclamation inviting "all persons interested to come in and be made parties, or see that others by whom they are content to be represented are made parties," and a decree was passed comprising a scheme to be carried out for such election, etc. A person not on the record and not a member of the Tengalai community, but claiming certain rights under the decree, now applied to compel the observance of the scheme. Held that the above order did not invest the suit with a representative character, and the applicant had no right to apply. RAJAYA v. RAJARATNAM I. L. R., 14 Mad., 57

225. Suit to remove trustee of Mahomedan endowment.—The right of worship of each worshipper in a Mahomedan mosque or religious endowment is an independent right wholly irrespective of the right of the other worshippers, and therefore non-compliance by a worshipper with the provisions of s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not affect a suit for the removal of a trustee of a Mahomedan endowment. 226. Joint suit by persons who have a common cause of action—Declaratory decree—Denial of right—Perpetual injunction—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 42 and 64.—The plaintiffs were the hereditary gors or priests, residing at Dakor, who ordinarily conducted their yajmans or patrons to the temple of Shri Ranchhod Baiji, performed worship there on their behalf, and received remuneration for their services. The defendants were the shevaks or ministers of the idol; it was their duty to remain in constant attendance on the idol, perform the daily services at the temple, collect the offerings, and apply the same to the purposes of the foundation. On 12th October

1883 the shevaks issued rules prohibiting people from entering the Nij Mandir and Saja Mandir, which were particularly sacred chambers in the temple, except on payment of certain fees. Every visitor was required to purchase a ticket of admission to the interior parts of the temple. The plaintiffs thereupon sued for a declaration of their right of free access to the Nij Mandir and Saja Mandir at all times and on all occasions when the temple was open for purposes of public worship. They alleged that the new rules framed by the shevaks constituted an infringement of their immemorial rights of going into the said mandirs without any let or hindrance, of worshipping the idol there for themselves and their patrons, and of receiving whatever their patrons gave them. They therefore sought for a perpetual injunction restraining the shevaks from interfering with their rights. The plaintiffs were 208 in number. Thirteen of them obtained leave to bring the suit on behalf of themselves and the rest under s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). The defendants contended (inter alia) that the plaintiffs had each a separate cause of action; that they had no right to sue jointly; that they were not entitled to a declaratory decree under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act; and that the plaintiffs, never having been obstructed in the exercise of their rights, had no cause of action. Held that the suit was rightly constituted under s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The rules made by the shevaks in 1883 interfered with the immemorial rights of the gora, and gave a common cause of action to all the plaintiffs. They were therefore entitled to sue jointly. Held also that the plaintiffs were entitled to a declaratory decree under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), as their title to free access with their patrons to the sacred shrines and to receive presents from their patrons unfettered by the rules of 1883 was denied by those rules. Held also that the plaintiffs were entitled to further relief by way of perpetual injunction under s. 54 of 1877, as the defendants had threatened to invade their enjoyment of property, and the invasion was such that pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief. Held also that the shevaks had no authority to issue the rules of the 12th October 1883, or to levy fees from worshippers in respect of any public religious services held in the temple. KALIDAS JIVRAM v. Two plaintiffs instituted a suit, on behalf of themselves and 42 other persons named in a schedule to the plaint, against a mohunt of an akhra to have certain alienations of property belonging to the idol set aside, and the mohunt removed on the ground that he was wasting the idol's property and setting up an adverse title to it, and to have another mohunt and trustee of the property appointed in his place. plaintiffs alleged that they and the 42 others named in the schedule were in the habit of worshipping the idol or of contributing to the worship and expenses of it, but it was clearly established by the evidence that any Hindu who chose was at liberty to give puja or render service and worship, and that others than the plaintiffs and the 42 persons named in fact did so, and that the plaintiffs and the persons named were therefore not the only persons interested in the suit. The plaintiffs applied for and obtained leave to institute the suit under the provisions of s. 30 of the Code. A decree having been made in their favour, on appeal—Held that the suit was not one to which the provisions of s. 30 were applicable, as the persons interested therein, not being the whole Hindu community, were incapable of ascertainment. SAJEDUR RAJA v. On second appeal.—Held, reversing the decree, that s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code was not applicable to the suit, which must be regarded as one in which the plaintiffs claimed to restrain the defendants from violating the common interest they all had in the land. TANUDIN v. declaration and injunction in connection with such removal, the plaintiffs were seven persons claiming relief as the panch or committee representing the whole community, and also in their individual capacity. It was found by the Court that the plaintiffs did not constitute the panch, and that they did not in that character represent the community. Held that s. 26 of the Civil Procedure Code (1882) was only an enabling section, it allowed the plaintiffs to bring a joint action, and should not be read as though all persons of the community must be joined as plaintiffs. Held also that s. 30 of the Code is an enabling section, and did not debar the plaintiffs from suing in their own right in this case. BAIJU LAL PAREBATHA v. Notice had not been given to the other worshippers, nor had leave of the Court been obtained prior to the institution of the suit. Held that the suit was maintainable notwithstanding that the Advocate-General had not been joined as a party; that s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure being permissive and not prohibitive and dealing with procedure only, and not affecting substantive rights, the omission to state in the plaint that the suit was instituted on behalf of other worshippers having similar rights to sue as the plaintiffs was not fatal to the maintainability of the suit; that the Court was competent, with a view of adjudicating completely and definitively on the matter in dispute, to require an amendment of the plaint, and that the suit need not necessarily be dismissed; that the omission to apply for leave under s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not in itself ground for dismissing a suit, but, on objection being taken, the suit should not be allowed to proceed except on the terms of the plaint being amended and the requisite leave being obtained; and that the granting of leave under s. 30 is not a condition precedent, and may take place after the institution of the suit. Jam Ali v. Two suits against K for possession of the property of B, deceased, were instituted in the Court of a Subordinate Judge by parties claiming adversely to one another as heirs to B. The Subordinate Judge, on the application of the plaintiffs in these suits, under s. 32, Act X of 1877, added the plaintiffs in the first suit as defendants in the second, and the plaintiffs in the second suit as defendant in the first. Held, on appeal by the defendant K from the orders of the Subordinate Judge, applying the rule stated above, that such additions of parties, not being necessary to enable the Subordinate Judge "effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suits," were not proper. The three brothers at the hearing expressed their willingness that A should sue alone. Held that such assent did not obviate the necessity of joining all the proper parties as co-plaintiffs, and that the suit therefore, as framed, would not lie. Held further that A would have been in no better position had he joined his three brothers as co-plaintiffs after the suit was, as regards them, time-barred; since such a suit would have been virtually a suit by himself alone and therefore bad. *Boodonath Bag v. 254. ———— Suit by members of joint Hindu family carrying on business in partnership—Joint co-contractors.—Two of the sons out of a joint Mitakshara family, consisting of a father and three sons and the widow and sons of a deceased son, and carrying on business in partnership, sued to recover money due on a hathchitta, dated the 11th December 1876; the last payment made and entered by the defendant being on the 20th July 1877. No time was fixed for payment of the money, so that it became payable on the date of the hathchitta. The suit was instituted on the 19th July 1880, and came on for hearing on the 26th July, when an objection was taken that all the parties who ought to sue were not on the record. On the application of the original plaintiffs, the names of the father and the third son were then added, and the plaintiffs were described as surviving partners of the deceased son. At the time the additional plaintiffs were made parties, the suit was, as regards them, barred by limitation. Held that the additional plaintiffs were rightly made parties to the suit, notwithstanding that the suit was, as far as they were concerned, barred. In actions of contract it is the right of the defendant, if he takes the objection in proper time, to insist upon all the persons with whom he contracted being joined as plaintiffs; and if, after the objection has been raised, the plaintiff proceeds with the suit without taking steps to add the person or persons whose non-joinder has been objected to, and the Court finds that the objection is well founded, the suit must be dismissed. Held that, inasmuch as the original plaintiffs could only enforce their claim in conjunction with the added plaintiffs, and the added plaintiffs were barred by s. 22 of Act XV of 1877, the claim of the original plaintiffs was also barred. Boodonath Bag v. Grish Chunder Roy, I. L. R., 3 Calc., 26, dissented from. There is no equity, but often much injustice, in allowing one joint contractor out of many to sue a defendant, notwithstanding an objection duly made by the latter; and the Court has no right to allow one contractor to recover under such circumstances, though he may, no doubt, afterwards adjust the sum which he recovers with his co-contractors. RAM-SHEBUX v. 256. ——— Non-joinder of parties—Application to join necessary parties refused by Court of first instance—Application granted by Court of Appeal—Order to add parties operating nunc pro tunc—Delay the act of the Court—Limitation.—The plaintiffs, as sharers in certain rent alleged to be due by the defendants, sued to recover their share. The defendants contended that all the co-sharers were necessary parties. At the hearing on the 24th January 1889, the plaintiffs' co-sharers applied to be made co-plaintiffs and to be allowed to adopt what the plaintiffs had done in the suit. The application was rejected, and the suit was dismissed for want of parties. On appeal, the District Court in July 1890, holding that the lower Court ought to have joined the co-sharers, passed an order making them co-plaintiffs, and then confirmed the lower Court's decree on the ground that at the time (3rd July 1890) the co-sharers were made plaintiffs the suit was barred by limitation. On appeal to the High Court, — Held, remanding the case, that the order of the lower Appeal Court of the 3rd July 1890, allowing the co-sharers' application, which had been made on the 24th January 1889, but had been refused by the Court of first instance, should be treated as operating nunc pro tunc, and that the co-sharers should be regarded as having been made parties to the suit when their application was made. The plaintiff was described as "the firm of K S by its manager S N." The defendants objected that one M was a partner in the firm and should be a party to the suit; he was joined as a co-plaintiff on the 27th January 1888. The defendants then contended that the suit was time-barred under s. 22 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Held that the case was one of misdescription and not of non-joinder, for the action was brought in the name of the firm by its manager.

The order of the words in the vernacular plaint showed that S, the manager, did not sue in his own name. C, the widow of B, having, with the concurrence of A, taken out letters of administration to B's estate, was, on the application of A at a hearing of the suit, made a co-plaintiff under s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held that C ought not to have been joined as a plaintiff in the suit, inasmuch as A had no right at all to sue. S. 32, as far as the addition of plaintiffs is concerned, only applies to those cases in which the original party who brought the suit had some title to sue. *CHUNDER COOMAR ROY v. The minor, on coming of age, applied to have his name substituted on the record. The High Court, under s. 78, Act VIII of 1859, ordered that his name should be added as plaintiff, and that the suit should be proceeded with. But as the dismissal by the lower Court was correct so far as the materials before the Court enabled it to deal with the suit, the order of remand was not to take effect until all the costs of the defendant had been paid by the plaintiffs. *MADRUBOHUNDER CHOWDREY v. The last part of the prayer was withdrawn. The mortgages were executed to secure a decree-debt, the decree having been passed ex-parte against the late karnavan of the tarwad. No fraud was alleged, but the lower Courts found that the karnavan had been guilty of fraud in allowing the decree to be passed ex-parte. The plaintiffs had not been parties to the decree, and the other junior members of the tarwad who had been joined were exempted from liability. Held per cur.—All the members of the plaintiffs' tarwad should have been joined actually, or constructively under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code. *MOIDIN KUTTI v. 278. — Likelihood of being affected by result of suit—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 73—Raising unnecessary issues.—S. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code enables the Court to bring in as parties to the suit any person whose rights appear to be involved, and who may be affected by the result of the suit. It does not enable parties who are not liable to be affected by the result to come in and raise altogether new issues which do not properly arise. Where the parties, however, all acquiesced in the irregularity, and the suit went to trial on the issues raised by the added defendant, the High Court did not think it necessary to quash the proceedings. *PADMALOOHAN SEN v. co-sharers with the defendants on the record in the property in dispute. The application was granted; the added defendants were found to be possessed of the share which they claimed, and on the proofs which they adduced the plaintiff's claim was dismissed. The plaintiff's claim as against the original defendants, who made no opposition, was decreed. In special appeal, on the ground that they should not have been made defendants, and that the plaintiff was not bound to prove his case against anybody else but the person against whom he had brought the suit, — Held that s. 73, Act VIII of 1859, leaves to the Courts of original jurisdiction a discretion in such cases; that the section is not limited entirely to cases where the suit as framed cannot proceed; that the words "persons who may be likely to be affected by the result" do not mean persons on whom the result would be legally binding. KALIPRASHAD SING v. N and others, who claimed to be entitled to a portion of the property specified in the plaint, intervened, and asked to be made defendants under s. 73 of Act VIII of 1859. Held that they were not parties likely to be affected by the result within s. 73 of the suit, and should not have been made parties to the suit. AHMED HOSSEIN v. On appeal, — Held that a co-heir is entitled to follow property of the deceased into the hands of any person who has misappropriated it, and such right is not taken away by the certificate. Therefore, any person who, with the consent of the holder of the certificate, has improperly possessed himself of property belonging to the deceased, and misappropriated it, may be joined as a co-defendant. 292. ———— Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 28 and 32—Judicature Act, Order xvi, Rules 3 and 6.—The plaintiffs brought a suit to recover certain sums of money from the defendants due to them under certain contracts which they alleged had been entered into by themselves and one A D as agent of the defendants, and asked for an account. The defendants, in their written statement, contended that there was no privity of contract between themselves and the plaintiffs, and denied the alleged agency of A D. The plaintiffs, before the hearing, applied to the Court to have A D added as a party defendant under ss. 28 and 32 of Act X of 1877, asking to be allowed to amend their plaint so as to pray for relief in the alternative against the original defendants or the said A D, or both against the original defendants and the said A D. Held that under s. 28 they were entitled to the order on the authority of the case of *Child v. In their written statement the defendants alleged that A had obtained the decree in question by fraud. Shortly before the present suit, V had mortgaged the house to H for Rs.3,000. About three weeks after the suit had been filed, H advanced a further sum of Rs.5,000 to V on the same security, and on the same day (12th December 1881) entered into an agreement with V, by which he agreed to buy the house for Rs.5,000, the sale to be completed immediately after the decision of the present suit. The agreement provided that V should defend the suit; but, if the result of the suit should be to establish the plaintiff's right to seize the house in execution, then that H should be at liberty to cancel the contract of sale. Subsequently V wrote to H declaring his intention of abandoning his defence. H thereupon applied to be made a defendant to the suit, in order to protect the house from the plaintiff. Held that H was entitled to be made a party under ss. 32 and 372 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). AHMEDBOY HUBIBHOY v. This decree was confirmed on appeal, and K made liable for the costs of those defendants in respect of whom his claim had been dismissed. Meantime B, an old judgment-creditor of K's father, took out execution against R, and applied for sale of K's rights in the estate, which were accordingly sold, the purchaser being K himself. costs, and put up K's rights for sale. The sale was opposed, under s. 246, Civil Procedure Code, 1859, by K, a son of B, whose claim was summarily rejected, and K's rights were bought by one A. R then brought a suit within one year to set aside the sale, and to have his own title declared. The suit was against the purchaser and against the representatives of the zur-i-peshgidars; but on the petition of L, one of M's heirs, her name was added to the list of defendants. The first Court gave R a decree, but the lower Appellate Court found that his claim was barred by limitation against L, on the ground of non-possession within twelve years, and in respect of the zur-i-peshgidar because K's decree had lapsed by delay in execution. Held that L was interested in the result of the suit, and the lower Courts committed no error in law in admitting her to be a defendant under s. 78, Civil Procedure Code, 1859. RAM SURUN SINGH v. In the meantime, the sale had taken place. Thereupon the owner of the property, which the High Court had held on appeal, was not saleable, brought a suit and made the decree-holders and auction-purchaser parties to it, and claimed as against them his property. Held that it was not competent to the Court, acting under s. 32 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to introduce into this suit as a defendant a person who claimed the property in suit by a title quite distinct from that under which any of the parties to the suit claimed. KALLAN RAI v. Appellate Court
—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 559.
—The Court of first instance gave the plaintiff in a suit for money a decree against the defendant B, exempting the defendants A and H. B appealed, making the plaintiff the respondent to the appeal. The plaintiff did not appeal from the decree of the Court of first instance in respect of the exemption of A and H. The Appellate Court made A a respondent to the appeal, under s. 559 of the Civil Procedure Code, and, exempting B, gave the plaintiff a decree against A. Held that, inasmuch as s. 559 does not empower an Appellate Court virtually to make an appeal for an appellant, who has refrained from availing himself of his privileges under the law, by introducing for him other respondents than those he has included in his petition of appeal, and it could not be said that A was "interested in the result of the appeal," as, having the unappealed decree of the Court of first instance behind him, his position was secure, the Appellate Court had improperly made A a respondent to the appeal and given a decree against him. ATMA RAM v. Practice—
Parties to cross-appeals.—Suit by the adoptive son of the obligee (deceased) of a hypothecation-bond to recover principal and interest due on the bond against the land comprised in the hypothecation. Defendant No. 1, the obligor of the bond, had executed it as manager of a joint Hindu family, of which defendant No. 2 was a member, and for the rightful purposes of the family. The family subsequently became divided, and the hypothecated property was divided between defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Defendant No. 1 afterwards hypothecated part of his share for a private debt to defendant No. 3, who, having sued on his hypothecation and brought the land to sale in execution, became the purchaser. The District Munsif passed a decree for the plaintiff, against which defendants Nos. 2 and 3 preferred separate appeals, the plaintiff being the sole respondent to each appeal. The District Judge on appeal passed a decree directing that the plaintiff should first proceed against all the property which was not subject to the hypothecation to defendant No. 3, including the share of defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 2 preferred a second appeal joining all the other parties. Held that, though both defendants Nos. 2 and 3 preferred separate appeals from the original decree, they only made the plaintiff respondent, and defendant No. 3 omitted to make the appellant (defendant No. 2) a party to his appeal, but the relief prayed for in each appeal was that the original decree might be set aside so far as it was in plaintiff's favour and against each appellant. . . . Having regard to the relief claimed, there was no reason to hold that the appellant (defendant No. 2) was a necessary party to the appeal preferred by defendant No. 3. GOPALA v. SAMINATHAYAN [I. Civil Procedure Code, s. 559—Joinder of respondents on appeal.
—In 1877 the plaintiff executed a deed of hypothecation to one of two partners to secure a loan obtained from them jointly. In 1881 the plaintiff sold, inter alia, the hypothecated property to defendants 2 to 4, and it was arranged that the secured debt should be paid off by the vendees. They failed to do this, but in 1882 they executed a mortgage for the amount due in favour of the other of the two partners, and he thereupon gave a written discharge to the plaintiff, who was found to have been acting in collusion with him to the disadvantage of his partner, the holder of the hypothecation-bond. The latter brought a suit in 1885 upon the hypothecation-bond, and obtained a personal decree against the present plaintiff, who did not appear and defend this suit, the amount of the decree being declared to be charged on the land in the possession of defendants 2 to 4. Meanwhile, defendant 1, who was the assignee of the mortgage of 1882, had obtained a decree upon it against defendant 4. This decree not having been executed, he subsequently sued upon the mortgage again, and obtained a decree against defendants 2 to 4. The plaintiff now sued to have the last-mentioned decree set aside and recover the balance of the purchase-money from defendants 2 to 4. The Court of first instance passed a decree for the amount claimed, and declared it to be charged on the land. Defendant 1 preferred an appeal in which defendants 2 to 4 were joined by the Court of First Appeal which dismissed the suit. Held that defendants 2 to 4 were rightly joined as respondents by the Court under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 559. KANAGAPPA v. SOKKALINGA . . . I. L. R., 15 Mad., 362

Power of the Appellate Court to add parties as respondents—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), s. 559.—In a suit for contribution by the plaintiffs against the defendants, the Court of first instance gave the plaintiffs a decree against one defendant and exonerated the others. On an appeal by the defendant against whom the decree was passed, the Appellate Court directed the defendants exonerated by the first Court to be added as respondents, set aside the decree against the appealing defendant, and passed a decree against the defendants who were added as respondents, as representatives of one S, and ordered the amount so decreed to be recovered from the estate of her (S's) husband. On appeal to the High Court by the defendants, who were thus made liable, on the ground that they were wrongly made parties and no decrees could be passed against them, —Held that there was nothing wrong in the course adopted by the lower Appellate Court, and by s. 559 of the Code of Civil Procedure the defendants were rightly made parties. Atma Ram v. Some of the defendants appealed to the High Court without making the other defendants party-respondents. The plaintiffs preferred a cross-objection under s. 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The non-appealing defendants were added as respondents by an order of the High Court to the effect that they might be made parties without prejudice to any objection that might be urged on their behalf at the hearing of the appeal. The non-appealing defendants at the hearing of the appeal contended that they were wrongly made parties. There is no express provision for it in the sections relating to execution. Ss. 361 to 372 relate to changes during suit, and speak only of "plaintiffs" and "defendants"—terms which seem to show that they were only intended to apply to proceedings up to final determination by the appellate decree and not to proceedings in execution between the judgment-creditor and

In a suit brought by the mother of these minors on their behalf against the Collector to set aside the sale, the plaintiffs impleaded also the other previous owners, of whom one was the purchaser at the sale. Two others, in their written statement, pleaded that the purchase had been made in fraud of their rights, and claimed to be still entitled to their shares in the mitta on the ground that the purchaser must be held to have purchased for their benefit (Indian Trusts Act, 1882, s. 90). They further claimed that, should the sale be set aside so far as the plaintiffs' interests were concerned, the sale of their interests also should be held to be null and void. Before the suit came on for hearing, the District Judge suo motu ordered that these two defendants should be made plaintiffs in the suit under s. 32 of the Code of Civil Procedure. At the date when this order was made, the claim of these defendants, had they sued to set aside the sale in their own interest, was barred by limitation. Held that the order was illegal. KRISHNA v. On receipt of the agreement, the Subordinate Judge issued notices to the parties to show cause why the agreement should not be filed, and was, on the day of hearing, informed that the agreement could not be filed owing to plaintiff's death. The agreement was then returned to the conciliator, who entered therein the name of the deceased plaintiff's heir and forwarded it to the Subordinate Judge. A question having thereupon arisen as to whether the conciliator could enter on the record the name of the heir of the deceased plaintiff, —Held that, although there is no provision in the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act empowering a conciliator to enter the name of the heir of a party, and Government have not apparently under s. 49 (a) of the Act made any rules regulating the procedure before conciliators in this respect, yet when a Subordinate Judge is seized of a conciliation agreement, there is a proceeding before him under the Act. In the meantime, in a suit instituted by the beneficiaries against the trustees, a decree had been passed on the 5th April 1898, declaring that the beneficiaries were entitled to possession of the trust estate from the 18th April and directing the trustees to make over possession to them. This decree further directed that proper conveyances should be executed by the trustees when required. On the 5th July 1898, the beneficiaries applied for substitution of their names in the place of the trustees in the appeal filed on the 18th April. Held that, though the trustees were directed to execute proper conveyances when required, yet, having regard to the direction as to delivery of possession, the decree of the 5th April must be taken to have divested the property out of the trustees and vested it in the beneficiaries. The trustees therefore had not any estate left in them on the 18th April sufficient to justify their being appellants. 357. ————— Procedure in case of the death of respondent pending an appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 368, 582.—Procedure analogous to that laid down in s. 368 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X) of 1877 in respect of the death of a defendant must be applied in the case of the death of a respondent. Where therefore a respondent dies during the pendency of an appeal, it is for the appellant to take the initiative, and he is at liberty to select one or more persons to defend the appeal; and no person other than the person so selected has a right to force himself into the proceedings and to claim to have his name entered as representative of the deceased respondent against the appellant's consent. Persons so introduced on the record may or may not be the real representatives of the deceased respondent; but the merits of their claim to be such, on the ground of any right or status, such as that of adoption, is immaterial to the determination of the appeal. LAKSHMIBAI v. 361. ——— Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 368, 369, and 372—Death of a respondent pending appeal—Right of assignee of his interest to be substituted in his place.—At an auction-sale held in execution of a decree passed against one G A, certain property put up for sale was purchased by one K M, the husband of the opponent. Subsequently K A, the brother of G A, brought a suit against the opponent to establish his right to the property purchased by the opponent's husband. On the 17th February 1882 he obtained a decree declaring that he (K A) was entitled to a half share of the property in dispute, and an order was made that he should have joint possession with the opponent of one moiety of the property. On the termination of the above suit, which had been brought by K A, in formd pauperis, he was required to pay the Court fees. For that purpose he procured an advance of Rs 290 from the applicant on the security of the moiety of the property which was awarded to him by the decree. He passed a deed of sale to the applicant, on the understanding that the property should be reconveyed to him by the applicant on the repayment of the advance with interest. In the meantime cross appeals were filed against the above-mentioned decree passed in favour of K A, and at the hearing of the appeal the lower Appellate Court varied the decree of the Subordinate Judge, holding that K A was entitled to the possession of the property as sought for. From this decree the opponent preferred a second appeal to the High Court, which, at the time of this application, was still pending. Before the hearing of the appeal, K A died and the applicant thereupon applied to have his name placed on the record as respondent. Held that the applicant was entitled to be made a party. The analogy of s. 368 is to be extended generally to appeals, and the party appealing may choose his own respondent as representative of deceased. The more specific rule prescribed in that section must prevail, in the cases to which it is exactly applicable, over the more general rule in s. 372. But the rule in s. 368 may well be intended for the case in which the death, and death only, of the defendant constitutes the change of circumstances for which it was thought necessary to provide; but where there has been, not only the death of the respondent, but an alleged prior conveyance to him of the property awarded by the decree appealed against, there is a fact in addition to the fact contemplated by s. 368, and the rule in s. 372, being alone sufficiently inclusive, must apply. An appellant may determine who shall be respondent, but not that any particular person shall not be a respondent. The choice of respondents made by the appellant may be defective through ignorance or fraud, and the real representative of the decree-holder cannot justly be refused an opportunity of maintaining the decision which it is sought to upset. *RAJABAM BHAGVAT v. Subsequently K applied to be substituted as respondent, alleging that he and not H was the legal representative of the plaintiff. The Court passed an order making K a joint respondent with H. To this H objected, but he did not appeal from the order. Ultimately the Court dismissed the appeal, and passed a decree that the money claimed in the suit was payable to the two respondents. Held that s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code did not apply to the case so as to authorize the Court below to add K as a respondent; that the only other section under which he might possibly have been brought in was s. 365; that even assuming

s. 365 to apply to such a case, the Court had no power to make K a respondent jointly with H, but should have taken one or the other of the courses specified in s. 367, so as to determine who was the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff; and that the course adopted by the Court was an exceedingly inconvenient one, which ought not to have been taken, even if the Court had power under the Code to take it. The "questions involved in the suit," referred to in the second paragraph of s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code, are questions between the plaintiff and the defendant, and not questions which may arise between co-defendants or co-plaintiffs inter se. The section does not apply to questions which are not involved in the suit, but crop up incidentally during the pendency of an appeal, such as the question whether one person or another is the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff-respondent. HAR NARAIN SINGH v. Pending the appeal, the plaintiff died childless, and, on her application, his widow was substituted for him as respondent. Subsequently the defendants-appellants applied to the High Court to have the deceased's father brought upon the record as respondent, alleging that he, and not the widow, was the deceased's legal representative and solely entitled to be placed on the record as such. The father made no objection to the proposed substitution. It was common ground that either the father alone or the widow alone was the deceased plaintiff-respondent's true legal representative. Held by the Full Bench (MAHMOOD, J., dissenting) that, having regard to the words "as nearly as may be" and "as far as may be" in s. 582 of the Civil Procedure Code, ss. 365, 366, and 367 might be applied, at all events analogically, to the case, so as to enable the real legal representative of the deceased plaintiff-respondent to be ascertained and brought upon the record; that the latter portion of s. 582 did not limit the earlier words of the section so as to make s. 368 the only provision applicable to the case; that a Court of record must have an inherent power to ascertain whether or not it has before it the proper parties to an appeal if the question be substantially raised; and that therefore the Court could and should, either before or at the hearing of the appeal, ascertain and determine, for the purposes of the prosecution of the appeal, the preliminary question whether the father or the widow was the legal representative of the deceased, and should act accordingly. Held also by the Full Bench (MAHMOOD, J., dissenting) that s. 82 of the Code did not apply to the case, and that, if it did apply, it would be the duty of the Court to decide whether the father or the widow was the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff-respondent. Held by MAHMOOD, J., contra, that the effect of s. 582 read with s. 587 was to place the defendants-appellants in the position of plaintiffs and the deceased respondent in that of a defendant for the purposes of array of parties; that consequently the provisions of ss. 363, 364, 365, 366, and 367 had no application; that, applying s. 369, the Court was bound to implead the person named by the defendants-appellants as a respondent to the appeal; that, applying s. 32, the widow occupied a position which gave her a sufficient prima facie status to be impleaded as respondent; and that, as there existed no authority in the Court allowing the Court to hold an enquiry whether the father or the widow was the true legal representative of the deceased plaintiff-respondent, the Court should bring both upon the record as respondents and proceed to decide the appeal after hearing both. Narain Dass v. 8. PARTIES IN TWO CAPACITIES.

375. ——— One person party both as plaintiff and one of the defendants—Objection, Validity of.—The plaintiff, as heir of his mother, sued a firm in which he was himself a partner to recover the amount of certain loans which he alleged that his mother in her lifetime had made to the said firm. It was objected that the suit was improperly framed, inasmuch as the plaintiff was also made a defendant. Held that the objection was not maintainable, the plaintiff being a defendant in a different capacity. *PREMI LUDHA v. 10. OBJECTION AS TO DEFECT OF PARTIES.

377. ——— Effect of omission to join necessary parties—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 78.—Held that it was opposed to the spirit of the Civil Procedure Code to dismiss a suit merely on account of there being defect of parties,—the Court, under s. 73 of the Code, being vested with the power of making the persons who seem to be interested in the subject-matter parties to the suit. RUOHFAUL v. JOHUR

By s. 31 of the Codes of Civil Procedure of 1877 and 1882 a suit is not to be dismissed for mere misjoinder of parties.

378. ——— Objection by defendant to want of parties—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 84.—S. 84 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) limits the time within which a defendant may object for want of parties, but it does not so limit the right of the plaintiff to add parties. In some cases s. 34 would not prevent even a defendant from objecting to the want of a proper party after the first hearing,—e.g., where, after the first hearing and before decree, a coparcener or remainder-man or reversioner is born, or where a woman (who is a party) is married to a man who is not a party to the suit. The objection did not exist at or before the first hearing, and therefore could not have been made or waived by the defendant; and if he made it at the earliest opportunity after it came into existence, he would have satisfied the spirit of s. 34. MODHE v. DONGRE. . . I. L. R., 5 Bom., 609

379. ——— Special appeal, Objection taken on—Irregularity not affecting merits of case.—By PRINSEF, J.—The objection as to the defect of parties after the case had passed through two Courts is not one affecting the merits of the case so as to be a ground of special appeal. *BOYDONATH BAG v. 380. ——— Non-attendance in Court—Appearance by agent.—A Rajah instituted a suit under Act X of 1859 through an agent appointed in that behalf. The Deputy Collector cited the Rajah himself to appear and be examined. He excused himself on the ground of the privilege under Act VIII of 1850, s. 22, and at the same time petitioned that the evidence of his general agent might be taken. The Deputy Collector, without examining the general agent, dismissed the suit, on the ground that the suit ought to have been instituted by the general agent; and that the Rajah himself was bound to obey his citation. Held that the Deputy Collector was bound to receive the evidence of the general agent and to decide the case upon the evidence which was tendered; and that the refusal of the Rajah, who had the privilege which he claimed, and his appointment of a special agent or mukhtear for the purposes of the suit, instead of his general agent, were no grounds for dismissing the suit. *JUGGUD INDUR BUNWARRE v. sufficiency of the sanction or confirmation given to it cannot be determined. In certain cases the Commissioner's sanction is required, in others that of the Collector. There are partitions known as imperfect partitions depending upon the conduct of the parties, and effected from first to last only with their consent. MUHUMDEE BEG. v. HOSSEIN ALI

[2 N. W., 26

2. ——— Informal partition—Partition by finding of Court in suit.—Where plaintiff sued for certain land in dispute as his own, and the lower Court found that it was his share, and that defendant held his separately, no further formal partition was held to be necessary. *MODHOOSOODUN CHATTERJEE v. 3. ——— Declaration of title to continue to enjoy separate possession of land—Suit for partition.—The plaintiffs, having obtained a declaration of title to continue to enjoy separate possession of certain lands, sued the former defendants again for partition of the same lands. Held that the suit was unnecessary, and should be dismissed. *ANDI v. 2. PRIVATE PARTITION.

4. ——— Effect of private partition—Effect of, on right of pre-emption.—A private partition, though not sanctioned by official authority, will, if full and final as among the parties to it, have the same effect as the most formal partition on the right of pre-emption. GOPAL SAHAI v. OJODHRA PERSHAD . . . 2 W. R., 47

6. ——— Effect of, on parties—Government and purchasers at revenue sale.—A private butwarra, though not binding against the Government or against a purchaser at a sale for arrears of Government revenue, who derives his title directly from Government, is binding as between the parties to the butwarra and persons claiming title under them. *TEIPOORAH SOONDAREE CHOWDHRAINER v. 9. ————— Beng. Reg. XIX of 1814, s. 30—Power of Collector—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.—It is not correct to say that, under s. 30 of Regulation XIX of 1814, the Collector is not at liberty to make any partition where the owners have already partitioned the lands amongst themselves. The true meaning of the section is that the Collector must be guided by the nature of the estate in applying the rules contained in the preceding sections of the Regulation; and that, where estates are not held in common tenancy, only a portion of those rules will apply. If the parties have divided the lands without agreeing as to the shares of the Government revenue to be paid by them, respectively, all the Collector has to do, when a partition has been applied for, is to make an assignment of the revenue in proportion to the interest of each shar-holder. If they have divided the lands and arranged amongst themselves as to the portion of the Government revenue which each is to pay, it is open to the Collector to accept or reject that arrangement. The Civil Court has nothing to do with the matter. AJODHIA LALL v. GUMANI LALL

11. ————— Family arrangement among co-sharers—Partition among shareholders in zamindari villages—Construction of agreement—Custom.—On a dispute among proprietors of shares in zamindari villages as to the respective amounts of the holdings till then undivided, to which they were entitled, a compromise made by their common ancestor's five sons, of whom the plaintiff's father was the eldest, had been filed in proceedings prior to this suit. This was construed to have assigned to the plaintiff's father an additional share, according to a custom recorded in the khewat at settlement, in virtue of which the eldest brother was entitled to a share greater than that allotted to the others,—a right termed "hakh jetharnai." *MANICK CHAND v. In 1818 a private partition took place between the co-sharers in the course of which certain specific lands were allotted to T in severalty, the rest remaining undivided. T granted a patni lease of her share to third parties who were thenceforth in possession; and subsequently there was a partition of the whole estate by the Collector under Bengal Act VIII of 1876, in the course of which the specific lands allotted to T in the private partition were allotted to the plaintiffs, who brought against the tenants of the land suits for rent to which they made the patnidars defendants. Held that the patnidars were properly made parties to the suits in order to try the question of the right to receive the rent as between the plaintiffs and the patnidars. Kashee Ram Dass v. Sham Mohinee, 23 W. R., 227; Ahmudsen v. Girish Chunder Shamunt, I. L. R., 4 Calc., 350; and Madan Mohan Lal v. Holloway, I. L. R., 12 Calc., 555, referred to. Held also that, assuming that the patnidars were not parties to the partition-proceedings by the Collector, they were entitled to retain possession of the lands allotted to their lessor T in the private partition, by which partition the plaintiffs were bound, notwithstanding the subsequent partition by the Collector. *Ahmedoolah v. 16. ——— Co-parceners—Joint possession—Suit by subordinate tenure-holder for partition against superior landlord.—Joint possession alone is not a sufficient ground for compelling a partition. In order that persons may be co-parceners, and so have a right to partition, not only must they be in joint possession, but that joint possession must be founded on the same title. A subordinate tenure-holder therefore has no right of partition as against his superior landlord. Ridai Nath Sandyal v. Iswar Chandra Saha, 4 B. L. R., App., 57 note, and Parbati Churn Deb v. Ainuddoon, 1. L. R., 7 Calc., 577; 9 C. L. R., 170, referred to. The plaintiffs were proprietors of a 12-anna share and dar-talukdars of the other 4-anna share of talukh A, which consisted of a 7½-anna share of so much of the lands of three villages D, B, and T as appertained to an estate in the Collectorate No. 23. Estate No. 23 with three other estates represented fractional shares in three parganas comprising about 500 villages. No partition had been made of these parganas, but by private arrangement certain lands in the village had been assigned to one estate, and certain other lands to another, some lands being kept joint and common to all four estates. In estate No. 23 there was another permanent tenure S, a talukh consisting of lands not only in the three villages D, B, and T, but in nine others: of this talukh a 2-anna share belonged to L, one of the zamindars of estate No. 23, and a 7½-anna share of the remaining 14-anna share was held under the plaintiff. In a suit against L for partition of such of the lands of talukh A as appertained to estate No. 23 and were separate from the other estates, to which the other zamindars of estate No. 23 were made parties, —Held, assuming the plaintiffs were entitled to partition at all, that the suit would lie as regards the lands specified as belonging to estate No. 23 without reference to the lands held in common as belonging to all the four estates. *Hari Das Sanyal v. 20. ——— Division between samindars—Beng. Reg. XIX of 1814.—One of the co-sharers of a joint estate suing conjointly with the others would, under Regulation XIX of 1814, be entitled to a separation of a mouzah from the rest of the zamindari, and an assessment upon it of a proper proportion of the total jumma, and having done this he would alone be entitled to have an order for partition of that mouzah as between himself and his co-sharers therein. If the zamindari which the plaintiff seeks to have divided is so intermixed with the neighbouring zamindaris that the line of boundary cannot be reasonably identified, he cannot call upon the Collector to make a new line. But if the Collector has the means of ascertaining where the boundary lies, he is bound to carry out a partition. BHUBRUT THAKOOR v. MURTAZA . . . 21 W. R., 225

(1819) a fourteen-anna eight-gunda share of a certain mouzah was permanently settled. The remaining one-anna twelve-gunda share was permanently settled in 1831. This share was sold for arrears of Government revenue in 1873, and purchased by the plaintiff, who subsequently applied to the Collector for partition under the Batwarra Act. The Collector refused to partition, upon the ground that the Act was not applicable to the partition of a mouzah held jointly by the proprietors of two separate estates. The plaintiff then brought the present suit, to which he made the Collector a party, to obtain a declaration that he was entitled to have his share separated from the fourteen-anna eight-gunda share by metes and bounds, and also for a decree directing a partition of the whole mouzah into two parts. Held that, so far as the plaintiff on the one hand and the owners of the fourteen-anna eight-gunda share on the other were concerned, the mouzah could be partitioned, but that such partition would not be binding upon the Government unless by consent. AJOODHYA PERSAD v. (8) and (9)—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 265.*—In 1851 an estate was brought under butwarra under the provisions of Regulation XIX of 1814. At such butwarra a portion of the estate being covered with water and unfit for cultivation was not divided, but left joint amongst all the co-sharers, the land-revenue payable on account of the whole estate being apportioned amongst the several estates into which the portion divided was split up. Subsequently, on the portion remaining joint becoming dry and fit for cultivation, an application was made by one of the co-sharers to the Collector to partition the same under the provisions of Bengal Act VIII of 1876, but that officer refused to do so, on the ground that the land "did not bear an assessed revenue and was not shown in the tozgi." In a suit brought under the above circumstances to compel the Collector to make the partition and in the alternative to have it made by the Civil Court,—Held that, though the reason given by the Collector for refusing was an erroneous one, he was not bound to make the partition under the provisions of Bengal Act VIII of 1876, as the land in suit was not liable for the payment of one and the same demand of land revenue, and was therefore not a joint undivided estate within the terms of s. 4, cl. (9), of that Act. Held also that the word "estate," as used in s. 265 of the Civil Procedure Code, must not be construed in the same limited and defective sense in which it is used in Act VIII of 1876, but must be taken to be there used in its ordinary signification, and that consequently the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for partition under the provisions of that section. *Chundernath Nundy v. This decree was transferred for execution to the Collector, who sold the land and rateably distributed the proceeds, except to V, who declined to take the amount tendered as his share. The plaintiff sued V and the purchasers under R's decree to recover his mortgage-debt by a sale of the property mortgaged to him. Held that R's decree, not being for partition of the family property or for the separate possession of a share, was not one contemplated by s. 265 of the

in possession making a false claim.—B, a childless Hindu and a Brahman, adopted X, his sister's son, and subsequently, apprehending that the adoption was invalid, executed a will by which he left his estate to X. After B's death, X obtained possession, and remained in possession of the estate till his death, which occurred before he had attained majority. After this, joint possession of the estate was obtained by P and S, two widows of B, who set up a right of inheritance from X as being in the position of mothers to him, in consequence of his adoption by their deceased husband. In a suit brought by S against P for partition of the estate,—Held that, inasmuch as the parties had set up a false claim to the estate, and had no estate in law which they could divide, the suit for partition was not maintainable merely by reason of the fact that they were in possession. *Armory v. The plaintiffs alleged that the land being held ijmali, although he and the defendants collected separately from the tenants their respective shares of the rent, difficulty and inconvenience had arisen in the management of the property, and he therefore sued to have his ten annas share of the land divided by metes and bounds from the six annas share of the patnidars, the land of the entire estate remaining liable as before for the entire amount of the Government revenue payable in respect of it. Held by the Full Bench that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for partition. HEMADRI NATH KHAN v. There is nothing in the butwarra law or in any other Regulation to prevent the Civil Court from entertaining a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to a larger share than that recorded in his name in the paper of partition. Where a butwarra had been made, and the plaintiff had had a specific share allotted to him, but which share was less than his proper share in the estate, and the plaintiff brought his suit against the co-sharers generally, without specifying in whose share the quantity he had lost was included,—Held the Court could, in such suit, declare the plaintiff's title to the same, treating him as a shareholder to that extent only in the pottah in which it may have been included. *SPENCER v. not joined in the application for partition. So far as ss. 111, 112, 113, 114, and 115 are concerned, a Civil Court is the Court which has jurisdiction to adjudicate upon questions of title or proprietary right, either in an original suit in cases in which the Assistant Collector or Collector does not proceed to inquire into the merits of an objection raising such a question under s. 113, or on appeal in those cases in which the Assistant Collector or Collector does decide upon such questions raised by an objection made under s. 112. The remaining sections relating to partition do not provide for or bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to adjudicate upon questions of title which may arise in partition-proceedings or on the partition after the time specified in the notice published under s. 111. S. 132 is not to be read as making the Commissioner the Court of Appeal from the Assistant Collector or the Collector upon such questions, nor does s. 241 (f) bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to adjudicate upon them. Where, therefore, after the day specified in the notice published by the Assistant Collector under s. 111, and after an Amin had made an apportionment of lands among the co-sharers of the mehal, the original applicants for partition raised for the first time an objection involving a question of title of proprietary right, and this objection was disallowed by the Assistant Collector and the partition made and confirmed by the Collector under s. 181,—Held that the objection was not one within the meaning of s. 113, that the remedy of the objectors was not an appeal from the Collector's decision under s. 132, and that a suit by them in the Civil Court to establish their title to the land allotted to other co-sharers was not barred by s. 241 (f), and, with reference to s. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, was maintainable. *Habibullah v. The suit therefore was one for an "imperfect partition" within the definition in s. 96 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, and s. 154, cl. under a prior agreement, in lieu of certain lands originally held by him which fell into B's putti. The Collector left the parties to settle the matter between themselves, and A brought a suit against B for his claim in the Civil Court. Held that, in a case of this kind, the only principle that can be adopted is that the Court should ascertain the relative value of the lands originally made over by the defendant to the entire lands of the defendant, and that it should assign, out of the present share of the defendant, lands bearing the same relative value to the whole that the former lands bore: this to be done without interference with the proceedings of the Collector under the batwarra law, and the plaintiff (if successful) to be brought in as a co-sharer to a limited extent in the land assigned by the defendant. *OOMA DUTT CHOWDREY v. To this the third co-parcener objected, but her objection was overruled by the lower Courts, and it was directed that the property in question should remain undivided. Held that the Court would be disinclined to order the property to be divided without giving the co-parcener or co-parceners who might wish to keep it entire an opportunity of doing so. Held per WHITE, J., that having regard to the form of the decree, it was not open to the Court executing it to order that any part of the property should remain joint, except with the consent of all the co-parceners who were parties to the suit. Semle per MITTAR, J., that the lower Courts were not precluded by the decree from dealing with the property in the mode in which they had done. *RAJ-COOMAREE DASSEE v. In 1874 the shares of K and P were sold in execution of decrees against them, and in 1877 the remaining shares were sold, and finally the house became the property of the plaintiff and one A in equal moieties. The plaintiff sued A for partition and obtained a decree, but pending execution A conveyed his moiety back again to K and V. The brothers had continued to occupy the house notwithstanding the changes in ownership. V now applied under s. 4 of the Partition Act (IV of 1893) to be allowed to buy the plaintiff's moiety. Held that he was not entitled to the advantage given by the section. It is ownership, not occupation, that gives the right. After the sales in 1877, the house no longer belonged to an undivided family. V and his brothers were then either tenants in the house or trespassers. The question was whether the dwelling-house at the time the shares therein, which had not been sold to A, were transferred to the plaintiff belonged to an undivided family. When the plaintiff purchased his moiety, he and A became the owners in common of the house, and as between them s. 4 of the Partition Act had no operation. The subsequent purchase of A's interest by R and V did not confer upon them any rights which A did not possess. It was in their hands re-acquired ancestral property, but not property belonging to an undivided family within the meaning of s. 4. VAMAN VISHNU GOKHALE v. VASUDEV MORBHAT KALE

and other sharers on partition.—Where the owner of an undivided share in a joint and undivided estate mortgages his undivided share, he cannot by so doing affect the interests of the other sharers, and the persons who take the security, i.e., the mortgagees, take it subject to the right of those sharers to enforce a partition and thereby convert what is an undivided share of the whole into a defined portion held in severalty. Where such a partition is effected under the provisions of Regulation XIX of 1814 before the mortgagees have completed their title by foreclosure and the consequential decree for possession, the mortgagees of the undivided share of one co-sharer who has no priority of contract with the other co-sharers would have no recourse against the lands allotted to such co-sharers, but must pursue their remedy against the lands allotted to the mortgagor, and, as against him, would have a charge on the whole of such lands. *BYJNATH LALL v. The defence was that the principle of an implied grant of easement upon severance of the tenement should not be applied to the case, but that the rights of the parties should be determined solely with reference to the decree made in the partition suit. Held that the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience should be applied to the case, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the right claimed, even in the absence of any express provision in the decree reserving such right. Quære—Whether the principle of an implied grant of easement in severance of tenements would apply in the case where the partition was effected by a decree of the Court in a contested suit and not by a consent of parties. *KADAMBINI DEBI v. equality of partition, that three villages should be divided in unequal proportions, and a goshwara was accordingly prepared by the Ameen setting out in one column the extent of the shares to be allotted, and in another the assessed jumma of each share allotted. In a suit in 1878 by the representatives of one of the shareholders to recover portions of the three villages, the only evidence that the partition had been completed was an istabar of the Deputy Collector, dated October 1864, directing the Nazir to require the raiyats to pay their rents according to the extent of the shares as set forth in the first-mentioned column of the goshwara; that is, according to the quantity instead of according to the quality and value which were the basis of the partition. Held (affirming the judgment of the High Court) that the plaintiff, having failed to prove any order for partition drawn out under s. 18 of the Regulation, by the Collector, was not entitled to recover according to the quantity of the land, but, if at all, according to its value as ascertained in the column of the goshwara in which the assessed jumma was set forth. HURRO SOONDARI DEBIA v. of such co-sharer—Partition re-opened—Fraud of mortgagor and mortgagee.—Four brothers, viz., D, L, B, and P, were joint owners of certain land. For purposes of convenience, each was in possession of a certain portion, but there was no formal partition. The particular land in question in this suit (plots Nos. 1 and 2 of Survey No. 174) was a part of the land in possession of B. In 1867, without the knowledge of his brothers, B mortgaged these plots of land to the first defendant for Rs. 2,800. In 1886 D sued for partition of the whole property, and in 1891 L brought a similar suit. By the decrees in these suits, plot No. 1 was allotted to D and plot No. 2 was awarded to L. The mortgagee was not a party to either suit, the plaintiffs in these suits (as found by the High Court) having had no notice of the mortgage. D and L, on attempting to get possession of the lands allotted to them respectively by the partition decrees, were obstructed by the mortgagee, and now brought these suits against him and the heirs of B (defendants Nos. 2–9), claiming possession of the lands allotted to them free of the mortgage-debt, or that the partition should be re-opened, and that unencumbered land should be allotted to them and the mortgaged land given to B's branch of the family (defendants Nos. 2–9). Held that the partition should be re-opened and the mortgaged land assigned to the defendants Nos. 2–9. Where a co-sharer of joint property has mortgaged his share without the knowledge of his co-sharers, and there has subsequently been a partition suit to which, through the fraud of the mortgagor and the mortgagee, the latter has not been made a party, he (the mortgagee) will only be allowed to proceed for the recovery of his mortgage-debt against that portion of the property which has been allotted to his mortgagor. Hem Chunder Ghose v. to share of another co-sharer—Lis pendens—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 52.—Plaintiff purchased a one-third share in an undivided estate and brought a suit for partition. During the pendency of the partition suit, the defendants, the two remaining co-sharers, granted a lease of a particular plot of land included in the undivided estate to the present defendant. By the decree for partition the plot of land under the lease was allotted to the plaintiff who brought the present suit to recover possession of the piece of land on the ground that he was not bound by the lease. Held that s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to cases where the shares of the parties and their rights to those shares are not disputed. The mode in which the lands should be allotted between the ascertained sharers does not affect the right to any specific property. Held also that the tenant, not having been a party to the partition suit, was not bound by the decree, and the plaintiff was only entitled to khas possession of the one-third share of the plot leased out by his co-sharers. KHAN ALI v. Extinguishment of title—Effect of partition on others than allottees.—The allotment of land to one person by partition extinguishes another's right altogether; his subsequent possession is either that of a trespasser or a tenant-at-will; his dispossession is not illegal, and he has no legal right of suit for recovery of possession. NOWAB BEGUM v. 111. Extinguishment of rights—Tenant rights, Effect of partition on.—A butwarra does not extinguish rights of tenants, and the mere circumstance that one of the proprietors of the estate was himself the tenant does not destroy his tenant right, because another of the proprietors has had the land allotted as part of his share of the divided estate. NUTHOO LALL CHOWDHRY v. SUNJEDA 11 W. R., 226

113. Proprietary right in sir land.—When an estate in which the proprietors have sir land is partitioned, such partition among the co-sharers is no way affected by any cultivating rights which may be possessed by cultivators not co-sharers in the estate; but it is also a well-understood effect and consequence of partition that co-sharers retain no right of occupancy in respect of any sir land which may have passed under the partition into the share of other co-sharers, as a sir-hold proprietor has no cultivating right distinct from, and independent of, his proprietary character. When, therefore, by partition he loses his proprietary title to any particular land, any cultivating right which he had in virtue of his proprietary character necessarily ceases. AMAN SINGH v. having been subjected to private partition, 4 bighas which were in the portion held by A were granted by him in mokurari. Subsequently, on the application of the parties, the Collector made a regular partition, by which two bighas of the mokurari land were allotted to the other sharers, who refused to recognize the grantee's mokurari rights for that portion of the land, contending that, as under the private partition all the 4 bighas were in the share of the grantor, the loss of rent should be on him, and that the Collector's butwarra could not transfer 2 bighas with the mokurari or smaller rental to the other sharers. Held that the grantor's mokurari title could not be got rid of by the butwarra, and that he was entitled to recognition by the other sharers. AHMEDOOLLAH v. In the meantime A had granted a mokurari to B in respect of the land allotted to him under the private partition. Held that, although the co-sharers must be taken to have consented to the redistribution, yet A could not by his consent affect the right of B, his mokuridar. Byjnath Lal v. In a suit for the partition of a family dwelling-house it was directed that the parties should take their respective shares by mutual conveyances with liberty to the plaintiff to raise a partition wall. The shares were allotted, but no conveyances executed. Held that in equity the parties must be deemed to have taken as if under mutual conveyances, in so far as concerned easements of light and air. BOLYN CHUNDER SEN v. The estate was subsequently partitioned by the revenue authorities into four several estates. The rent of the tenure was thereupon allotted proportionately to each of the four estates thus formed, although the land forming the tenure remained undivided. In a suit for enhancement of the rent of the tenure brought by the proprietor of some of the estates, — Held that the effect of the partition of the parent estate was to create separate and distinct tenures out of the original single tenure under the proprietors of each of the estates; that the proprietors of the several estates were not joint landlords of the tenure within the meaning of s. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that therefore a suit for enhancement of rent would lie by a proprietor of one of the estates in respect of the rent allotted to his estate. Sarat Soondaree Debia v. In a suit for a declaration of his right to the share claimed by him, and for confirmation of possession thereof, both the lower Courts gave a decree for the plaintiff. On special appeal, an objection was taken that the suit would not lie, no application having been made in it for the annulment of the partition proceedings by which the property sued for was included in the plaintiff's share. Held that the suit would lie; that there was no necessity for the

In a suit by C against B for obtaining possession of his share in Kishoopore,—Held that there was no cause of action. 128. ——— Order for partition by Assistant Collector confirmed by Collector—Objection subsequently made to mode of partition—Question of title—N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), s. 113.—Upon an application made under s. 108 of the N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873) for partition of a share in a mehal, no question of title or proprietary right of the nature contemplated by s. 113 was raised, nor any serious objection made by any of the co-sharers, and the Assistant Collector recorded a proceeding setting forth the rules which were to govern the partition, and this proceeding was confirmed by the Collector under s. 138. An Amin was ordered to carry out the partition, and, in taking steps to do so, stated the principle upon which he proposed to distribute the common land. An objection was then for the first time raised by two of the co-sharers in the Court of the Assistant Collector to the inclusion of a particular piece of land in the partition, on the ground that it appertained exclusively to their share. This objection was disallowed by the Assistant Collector, and, on appeal, by the District Judge. Held that, at the stage of the proceedings when objections were taken, it was too late to determine questions of title under s. 113 of the Act ; that accordingly the Assistant Collector could not be said to have done so ; that the objections could therefore only be regarded in the light of objections to the mode in which it was proposed to make the partition, and that consequently there was no appeal from the order of the Assistant Collector to the District Judge or from the District Judge to the High Court. TOTA RAM v. This application was struck off, and a second application was made on the 28rd July 1888. The arbitrator then declined to act, and the application was struck off. The present application was made on the 1st August 1891, and an objection was raised that, more than three years having elapsed from the date of the previous application, the present one was barred under art. 179 of sch. II of the Limitation Act. The lower Court of appeal held that art. 178, and not art. 179, applied to the case, but that, the plaintiff having applied within three years from the date when the arbitrator declined to act, the application was in time. Held, with reference to the provisions of s. 396 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that the proceedings for the purpose of effecting the partition were proceedings in the suit itself, and not proceedings in execution of the decree; that no formal application was necessary, the Court being bound to proceed with the suit and make a final decree; and that the application made on the 1st August 1891 was not one to which limitation was applicable. *DWARKA NATH MISSEER v. 1. WHAT CONSTITUTES PARTNERSHIP.1. ——— Participation in profits—

Application of English law.—M M & Co., merchants in London, carrying on business with W N W & Co., merchants in Calcutta, sought to make the defendant liable as a partner in the latter firm, under a particular memorandum of agreement between the members of the firm of W N W & Co. and the defendant. Held that such agreement did not constitute the Rajah a partner in or with the said firm. Participation in profits does not constitute a partnership. The question is, not whether the person sought to be made liable participated in the profits, but whether the trade has been carried on by persons acting on his behalf. There is no rule of law which imposes partnership liability upon a man who advances to others money for the purpose of carrying on their business, and in return secures to himself a share of the profits which may arise from the employment in the business of the money so advanced by him. PRATAB CHUNDEA SINGH v. MOLLOW, MARCH & Co.

S. C. COURT OF WARDS v. MOLLOW, MARCH & Co. 12 W. R., 56

On appeal to the Privy Council,—Held, although a right to participate in the profits of trade is a strong test of partnership, and there may be cases where, from such participation alone, it may, as a presumption, not of law, but of fact, be inferred, yet whether that relation does or does not exist must depend on the real intention and contract of the parties. To constitute a partnership, the parties must have agreed to carry on business and to share profits in some way in common; but where a contract is entered into between partners and a third person for the protection of that person as a creditor, whereby it is agreed that he shall receive in consideration of advances commission on the net profits of the partnership business, and large powers of control over the business are given to him, but no power to direct transactions, the Court, if satisfied that the contract was one of loan and security, will not interpret it as constituting a partnership. In applying the English law of partnership to cases in India, the usages of trade and habits of business of the people of India, so far as they may be peculiar and differ from those in England, ought to be borne in mind. *MOLLOW, MARCH & Co. v. not be discovered, the bonus and any sum paid as rent would be refunded. Held that this was a partnership arrangement, and the payment of the money which went by the name of rent was not as by a tenant to a landlord, but as consideration-money for land forming a portion of the capital. *SEENMUN-JUREN DOSSEE v. 3. ——— Contract Act, ss. 239, 240—Loan of money.—Held, on the construction of the agreement in this case, that such agreement did not create a "partnership" between the parties thereto, as defined in s. 239 of Act IX of 1872, but was an agreement of the kind mentioned in s. 240 of that Act. *BRAGGU LALL v. 5. ——— Account.

There is no analogy in respect of the manager being liable to account between a joint Hindu family and a partnership. Where it was arranged amongst the members of a joint Hindu family that the accounts of a banking business carried on by them should be kept, on the understanding that the profits, when realized, should be divided amongst the individual members in certain proportions, and that the expenses of each member should be credited and charged in the name of each member,—Held that this was in the nature of a partnership, and an account was decreed. RANGANMANY DAS v. KASINATH DUTT

6. ——— Ancestral business—Account.

An ancestral trade may descend like other inheritable property upon the members of a Hindu undivided family. The partnership so created or surviving has many, but not all, of the elements existing in an ordinary partnership. For example, the death of one of the partners does not dissolve the partnership; nor, as a rule, can one of the partners, when severing his connection with the business, ask for an account of past profits and losses. *SAMALBHAI NATHUBHAI v. of partner to nominate a successor—General device not an exercise of power—Effect of default in exercising power of nomination—Good-will—Valuable asset.—V, J, and S, being large shareholders in the Great Eastern Spinning and Weaving Mills, Limited, entered into an agreement in October 1878 to cause the said company to be wound up and to form a new company to take over its assets and liabilities, and to cause themselves to be appointed agents of the new company under the firm of V J S & Co., and under that name to act as agents of the new company, subject to the terms of the agreement. The agreement provided that the firm of V J S & Co. should take the agency of the new company for a period of thirty years; that of the profits to be derived by the said firm out of the agency V should receive 39 cents, J 31 cents, and S 30 cents; that in case of a vacancy in the firm of V J S & Co., caused by the death or retirement of any of the partners, the nominee of the dying or retiring partner should be admitted into partnership, and should receive the share of such partner, and should exercise all his authority. In pursuance of this agreement, the Great Eastern Spinning and Weaving Mills, Limited, was wound up, and a new company called "The New Great Eastern Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited" was formed and registered. Both the memorandum and articles of association of the said new company contained clauses providing that the firm of V J S & Co., or whatever member or members that firm for the time consist of, should be agents of the company so long as the said firm should carry on business in Bombay, or until they should resign. The firm of V J S & Co., having been constituted under the said agreement, became the agents of the said company, and continued to act as such down to the date of the present suit. No other business was done by the firm, and the three partners divided the profits realized by the firm out of the agency business in the shares specified in the agreement as above mentioned. V died in 1874, leaving a will whereby, in exercise of the right vested in him by the agreement, he nominated and appointed his wife K as his successor in the firm, and she accordingly became and was recognized as a partner therein. In August 1875 she assigned her interest in the firm to H, and he thereupon became a partner and received 39 cents of the profits. In November 1876 J assigned his interest in the firm (31 cents) to H and S, of which 21 cents became the property of H and 10 cents the property of S.—the firm henceforth consisting only of these two partners, of whom the former received in all 60 cents of the profits and the latter 40 cents. In November 1882 H died, leaving a will whereby he appointed his wife B his executrix, and left all his property to her for life, and after her death to his son. The will did not refer to the firm, or nominate any successor in the partnership. In the present suit B as executrix claimed to be entitled to 60 cents or shares in the firm of V J S & Co. up to the date of the testator's death, and to a like share in the profits earned subsequently to his death, or to be earned by the firm so long as it continued to carry on the said agency business of the company. The defendant admitted the right of the plaintiff to the share claimed in the profits earned prior to the testator's death, but resisted her claim to any portion of the subsequent profits. Held (1), on the authority of Beamish v. Beamish, Jr. Rep., 4 Eq., 120, that the testator's will did not operate as an exercise of the power of nominating a successor in the firm so as to make the plaintiff a partner. (2) That having regard to the nature of the duties of the firm as agents and to the language of the agreement constituting the firm, coupled with the fact that there was no capital employed in the business, it must have been intended that, in default of nomination of a successor by a retiring or deceased partner, the agency should be carried on by the continuing or surviving partners in the name of the firm, and that the interest of the testator in the firm upon his death therefore survived to the defendant. Held also that, although the plaintiff was entitled to an account up to the date of the testator's death, she was not entitled to a share of the good-will as an asset of the firm. The good-will of a firm is attached to the name, and in the present case, by the partnership agreement itself, the name was to be used by the surviving partners or partner for their own benefit. That arrangement took away all value from the good-will, if indeed it was consistent with its being an asset at all. BACHUBAI v. SHAMJI JADOWJI . . . I. L. R., 9 Bom., 536

2. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTNERS.

9. ———— Construction of deed of partnership—Agreement to give managing partner commission—Dissolution of partnership—Loss of commission on dissolution.—By an agreement, made on the 10th of January 1857, between K N and several other persons, it was agreed that they should form a co-partnership for the purpose of erecting a mill for the manufacture of yarn. The capital of the partnership was fixed at Rs. 3,00,000, divided into 100 shares of Rs. 3,000 each. By the 4th clause of the agreement it was provided that, in return for the trouble K N had been at in establishing the factory, "whatever cotton had to be purchased for the factory K N was to purchase, and whatever yarn should be made in the factory K N was to sell, and for whatever he should sell on account of the factory he was duly to receive from the co-partnership his commission at the rate of 5 per cent. during his lifetime," and it was also provided that, though the purchases and sales by the co-partnership should not be made through K N, "yet upon the whole amount of the sales the co-partnership was duly to pay 5 per cent. to K N during his lifetime." The factory was built, and its machinery procured and set up by K N, and both financially and otherwise the factory was wholly managed by him. Shortly after it commenced to work, it was found that the co-partnership had expended all its capital and was heavily involved in debt—incurred by K N without the sanction of his co-partners,—and that the factory was working at a loss; and at the suit of some of them, but against the consent of K N and a minority of the co-partners, the co-partnership was ordered to be dissolved. K N then claimed to be entitled to compensation for the loss of the commission he should have earned upon the sale of the yarn of the factory during his lifetime. Held that he was not so entitled; that as between his co-partners and K N there was no obligation on the former to subscribe more capital after the original capital of the co-partnership had been exhausted; and that there was no implied covenant on the part of co-partnership to continue to work the factory in order that K N should be in a position to earn his commission during his lifetime. Distinction between right to compensation for loss of fixed wages and right to compensation for loss of commission pointed out. When a partnership is wound up by the Court, all questions arising between the partners out of the partnership transactions should be disposed of in the winding-up suit. LALBHAI VALLABHBHAI v. KAVASJI NANABHAI 8 Bom., O. C., 209

10. — Payments made by partners
—Presumption—Dissolution of partnership.—Payments made by the different partners of a firm are presumed to have been made out of the funds of the firm where the contrary is not proved by any satisfactory evidence; and when a firm consisting of two members is dissolved by the death of one partner, the presumption is that the deceased was entitled to a moiety of the existing assets. KESHAV GOPAL GINDE v. RATAPA 12 Bom., 165

11. — Dormant partner, Liability of—Bond executed by one of several partners—Light of creditor.—The doctrine that a dormant partner, when discovered, is liable for every debt incurred for the partnership by the active partner, is not absolute in the Courts in England, and is not to be followed by the Courts of this country, unless found in particular cases to be consonant with justice, equity, and good conscience. Where money was lent on a bond to a "malik and mukhtear" of a factory on his personal credit and the security of the entire factory, and it was afterwards discovered that other parties had a share in the factory, it was held that the lender was not entitled to go beyond his contract and recover from those other parties personally. NUNDERPUT MAHATAH v. URQUHART [9 W. R., 355]

12. — Bill drawn by one partner.—Every one of the partners in a mercantile firm of ordinary trading partnership is liable upon a bill drawn by a partner in the recognized trading name of the firm for a transaction incident to the business of the firm, although his name does not appear upon the face of the instrument, although he be a sleeping and secret partner. In order to take a case out of these principles of the general law, it must be shown that the holder of the bill knew at the time he received it that the trans-

KURNEEDAN* 24 W. R., 60

14. — Liability of partner for purchases made by co-partner out of the scope of partnership business—Application of proceeds of sale to pay partnership debts.—C, the managing member in Calcutta of a firm of which B, the other partner, was absent in England, made, unknown to B and without authority from him, various purchases from the plaintiff of articles not within the scope of the partnership business. The purchases were made as for the firm, and were delivered on the partnership premises by the plaintiff. Subsequently, the goods were taken to C's house, and, together with certain private property belonging to C, were sold by auction, and the whole proceeds of the sale were paid by C to a bank in Calcutta to the partnership account with that bank, and were eventually remitted to B in England as from the partnership funds, and applied in payment of certain bills of the firm then due. B, on coming to Calcutta, took over the management of the business from C. In a suit brought against B and O for the price of the goods purchased from the plaintiff, —Held both in the Court below and on appeal that B was not liable. MARTIN v. BAKER [15 B. L. upon all goods "belonging to" them in their go-downs for balances that might be due by them. Some time after the date of the agreement, while there was a balance due, the defendants' firm took in a new partner. Held that the words "belonging to" included all goods in the possession of the new firm that came to them in the way of business. Held also that the new firm, not having given notice to the contrary, must be taken to have engaged the plaintiff as banian upon the terms expressed in the agreement with the old firm, and to have taken over the balance due at the time when the new firm was constituted as a debt due by the new firm. BALDEO DAS AGARWALLA v. 19. ——— Power of partner to borrow money—Winding up—Account—Suit for dissolution—Power of partner to mortgage partnership land.—T, B, R, and W, the owners of a certain estate in equal shares, in 1863 entered into a partnership for "the cultivation of tea and other products" upon such estate. In 1864 H, E, and I joined the firm. In 1870 H died; and in 1871 T purchased the shares of E and I, and in 1873 of R. In 1875 T gave the Delhi and London Bank a mortgage on such estate as security for the repayment of money which he had borrowed from the Bank ostensibly for the purposes of the estate. The Bank obtained a decree against him personally for the money, in execution of which his rights and interests in the estate were put up for sale on the 20th June 1877 and were purchased by the Bank, which obtained possession of the estate in August 1877. In August 1879 B and W's executor sued T and the Bank, claiming a declaration that they were or had been partners with T in the estate; that if the partnership should be held to be subsisting, it might be dissolved, or that, if it had ceased to exist, the date of its termination might be fixed, and that in either event a liquidator might be appointed to take an account, and, after realizing assets and discharging liabilities, might be ordered to pay them each one-third of such balance as remained. Held that, as the effect of the purchases by T in 1871 and 1873 was to relieve the estates of H, E, I, and R of all past and future liabilities of the partnership, in respect of which B and W still continued as liable as T, and to which they would have to contribute to discharge, such purchases should be regarded and treated as made on behalf of the partnership; and therefore, at the time of the execution of the mortgage of the estate, B, W, and T were interested in the estate to the extent of one-third each: that, although T was not authorized, either actually or impliedly, by B and W to mortgage the estate, and the mortgage therefore was not binding on them, yet, as they allowed him to conduct the business of the estate in such a manner as to make it appear that the control and management of it rested with him, and he was for all ordinary business purposes their representative, B and W were bound, in any accounting that might take place, to recoup the defendant Bank for such advances as were made to T for the necessary purposes of the estate, in the same proportion as they must discharge debts due to other creditors; that T was entitled to be reimbursed such moneys of his own as he had expended within the legitimate scope and for the proper purposes of the partnership as originally contemplated by the parties. 20. ——— Liability of partners—Joint contract—Joint liability—Judgment recovered against one partner.—The defendants were partners trading in the name of V G & Co. On 6th July 1895, at Ahmedabad, the first defendant borrowed from the plaintiff, for the purposes of the partnership business, a sum of Rs10,000 and passed a khata in the name of his firm. On 25th April 1896, at Baroda, he passed another khata to plaintiff, under which the plaintiff was to recover the debt due to him from the partners jointly and severally. On 2nd October 1896, plaintiff obtained a decree on an award against the first defendant in the Civil Court at Baroda for Rs13,909-4-0, and in execution of this decree he recovered a sum of Rs7,000. In 1897 plaintiff filed this suit in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmedabad to recover the balance, viz., Rs6,909-4-0, from all the partners (defendants Nos. 1 to 8). The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit; the plaintiff appealed to the High Court. Held that, the original liability of the partners being a joint liability, the first defendant had no authority, without the consent of his partners, to change the joint liability of each partner, which was the ordinary incident of the partnership, into a joint and several liability. LAKSMISHANKAR DEOSHANKAR v. VISHNURAM I. L. R., 24 Bom., 77

21. ——— Payment to a partner in fraud of his co-partners—Discharge of debt—Constructive notice—Lease taken by agreement in name of one partner.—The defendants, other than the first defendant, styling themselves the "agricultural association," entered into three rental agreements, two of them dated April 23rd, 1891, and the third dated June 21st, 1891, with the plaintiffs and the first defendant, for the cultivation of certain lands belonging to an undivided family, of which the plaintiffs and first defendant were members, and took possession of and cultivated the said lands. On the 17th June 1891, an agreement, of which the second defendant had notice, was entered into between the plaintiffs and first defendant to the effect that the first plaintiff should be the managing member of the family and should be entitled to receive the rent and give receipts for the same. Subsequently, disputes arising between plaintiff and first defendant, the other defendants made payments of rent to first defendant alone. Held that these payments were not a valid discharge as against the claim of the plaintiffs on its being proved that second defendant had notice of the agreement of the 17th June, and that notice to him must be taken to be notice to his partners, the other defendants. By an agreement between the defendants any one partner was empowered to take a lease; such lease to be binding on all the partners as if executed by them. The leases were not signed by the 13th defendant (now represented by appellants 19, 20, and 21), who was admittedly a partner and took actual part in the management of the affairs of the firm after the leases were executed. Held that it was intended that the leases should operate as if all the members had executed them, and that the representatives of 13th defendant were bound. CHINNARAMANUJA AYYANGAR v. 24. — Liability of partners to account—Suit for an account—Suit by partner to recover from co-partner share of losses and advances.—It is only in exceptional cases that a suit can be brought by one partner against another, which involves the taking of partnership accounts prior to dissolution. A suit was brought by the widow of a partner in an indigo concern against her deceased husband's co-partner in respect of certain alleged losses of the concern, and to recover a moiety of moneys expended by her husband in advances made to indigo cultivators on behalf of the partnership. At the time when the suit was brought, the partnership had not been dissolved. Held that, the partnership not having been dissolved, the plaintiff was not entitled to an account, and the suit must therefore fail. Brown v. 29. — Suit for contribution among partners—Transactions by some only of partners—Obligation to ask for account of partnership dealings.—Four members of a partnership consisting of seven persons borrowed certain sums on account of the partnership for which they gave their joint and several promissory notes on which decrees were afterwards obtained against them. In a suit for contribution brought by one of the four members against the others, as having paid more than his share under the joint decrees, Held that the giving of the promissory notes was not a partnership transaction so as to debar the plaintiff from a suit for contribution without asking for an account of the partnership dealings. DOYAL JAIRAJ v. 30. — Partnership business—Money borrowed by agreement by one partner and paid into partnership business—Decree against one partner—Suit for contribution by him against other partners—Adjustment of account whether necessary.—In a partnership business entered into between the plaintiff and the defendants, it was agreed that each member, together with the gomashas of the business, should be at liberty to borrow money upon his individual credit and to pay into the firm the money so borrowed to carry on the business. The plaintiff conjointly with defendants 4 and 6, in accordance with that agreement, borrowed several sums of money upon promissory notes, and paid the amounts so borrowed into the business. After the loan, the partnership business came to an end, but no account was settled. Afterwards decrees were obtained upon those promissory notes, and the plaintiff was obliged to pay up the decretal amounts. To a suit for contribution by the plaintiff, for money so paid, against the members of the firm, the defence, inter alia, was that the suit was not maintainable, in the absence of adjustment of the accounts relating to the firm. Held that the suit was maintainable, inasmuch as the money secured by the promissory notes did not become an item of the partnership account. *Doyal Jairaj v. In a suit by one of the persons in whose favour the agreement was passed, without making the others parties, against the person who executed it, to recover his share, it was held that the suit was not maintainable, as it could only be brought as a suit between partners for an account, and the result of all the partnership transactions must be brought at once under the view of the Court. *BHAGTIDAS BHAGYANDAS v. alleged to have come into the possession of the partnership during its existence. In his own name A lent moneys to the concern for the purpose of carrying on the business, and each partner was to be separately liable for the moneys advanced in proportion to his share in the concern. In a suit against one of the partners for his proportion of the moneys so lent,—Held that the plaintiff could not sue for those moneys on the footing of a mere creditor, and that the suit should be so framed as to determine the profits or losses of the concern, and whether any and what assets would be available to each partner to liquidate the loan in proportion to his share. *CHUNDER SIKHUR BISWAS v. 35. ———— Suit by representative of a deceased partner for a share of a specific asset of the partnership recovered after the right to a general partnership account is barred.—A suit may be brought by the representative of a deceased partner against the surviving partner of a firm to recover a share in a sum received by the surviving partner in respect of a partnership transaction within the period of limitation, although a suit to take partnership accounts generally would be barred. H J, the plaintiff's father, and the defendant R were partners in the firm of Hormusji and Rustomji, which carried on business in China. In the year 1862 the firm of N K & Co. was largely indebted to the firm of Hormusji and Rustomji. At the end of that year the latter firm ceased to do business, but no formal dissolution of the partnership ever took place. In 1869 the defendant R filed a suit (No. 461 of 1869) in the High Court of Bombay in his own name and that of H J, his former partner, against the firm of N K & Co. for an account of the dealings of that firm with the firm of Hormusji and Rustomji, and by a decretal order dated 19th March 1870 the suit was referred to the Commissioner to take the accounts as prayed for. On the 17th December 1872 H J died at Hongkong intestate. On 22nd February 1873 the defendant R assigned to the second defendant W for Rs 20,000 the claim of the firm of Hormusji and Rustomji against the firm of N K & Co. The plaintiff did not know of this arrangement, and he only became aware of it in 1880. The plaintiff alleged that of the said sum of Rs 20,000 the second defendant W paid to the first defendant R Rs10,000 in 1878, and for the remaining Rs10,000 gave a promissory note payable in July or August 1881. The plaintiff took out letters of administration to his father H J, and brought this suit on 16th July 1880, claiming a moiety of the Rs10,000 already paid by the defendant W to the first defendant R, and praying that he might be declared entitled to a moiety of the remaining sum of Rs10,000 payable by the defendant W, and that the same might be paid over to him. The defendant R alleged that he had assigned the claim against the firm of N K & Co., to the defendant W, and had received the consideration for such assignment in February 1878, and contended that if the plaintiff had ever any claim to any portion of the said money (which he denied), such claim was barred by limitation. He also alleged that he had carried on the suit No. 461 of 1869 without any assistance from the plaintiff's father H J, or from the plaintiff, who, although applied to, refused to assist him, and he submitted that under no circumstances was the plaintiff entitled to any of the moneys claimed by him without giving credit to the defendant for his (plaintiff's) share of the expense of prosecuting the said suit, and for the amount of proper remuneration to the defendant for the time and labour bestowed by him in the said suit. He also claimed that the partnership accounts of the firm of Hormusji and Rustomji should be taken, and alleged that on such accounts being taken a large sum would be found due to him from the partnership. The second defendant W paid into Court the Rs10,000 due on the promissory note above mentioned, and was dismissed from the suit. At the hearing the Judge found that, of the other moiety of the consideration for the assignment of February 1878, a sum of Rs1,000 was paid by the defendant W to the defendant R on January 23, 1878, and a sum of Rs6,000 on September 13, 1879. Held that the suit was not barred by limitation in respect of the said sums of Rs1,000, Rs6,000, and Rs10,000, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover a half share of these sums from the defendant R, deducting all sums expended by the defendant in the prosecution of the suit No. 461 of 1869, no allowance, however, being made to him as remuneration for conducting the suit. Held also that the defendant might deduct the amount (if any) which might be found due to him on taking the partnership accounts, although a separate suit for such account would be barred by limitation. *MERWANJI HORMUSJI v. tory authority to the contrary. The effect of s. 45 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) is to extend the English law applicable to trading partnerships to all cases of partnership. 37. — Suit by assignee of executors of deceased partner—Suit for declaration of right to share of partnerships and for an account.—R, prior to his death, was a partner with defendants in the firm of N C & Co. He died on 8th November 1884. On the 9th November 1885, his executors passed a release to the defendants, which recited that R's share in the firm and future business had ceased on his death; that the surviving partners had requested the executors to settle the account of their testator with the firm, and that, after examining the books and taking accounts, etc., a balance of Rs8,895-11-0 was found due, on payment whereof the executors released the defendants from all claims in respect of the share and interest of R. On the 7th April 1887, the executors assigned over to the plaintiff a one-anna share in the said firm, and the plaintiff, as assignee, brought the suit for a declaration of his right to the share and for an account. He alleged that there had been no accurate examination of the books at the time of the release; that the amount really due to the testator's estate by the firm had not been ascertained; and that it had been agreed on by the partners, at the time of the release, that in addition to the sum therein mentioned, the executors, as representing the testator's estate, should receive a one-anna share in the partnership. Held on the evidence that it had not been proved that all the partners consented to the alleged new partnership, and that on this ground alone the plaintiff could not succeed in his suit. *COWASJI RUTTONJI LIMBOOWALLA v. 40. — Assignment by plaintiff's partners of their shares—Decree for winding up and for an account.—The plaintiff, as a partner in lending a sum of money upon security given, had a half share in the joint adventure with the first and second defendants. These two, without the plaintiff's exonerating them from liability to him, had assigned their shares to two other persons. The assignees were added as co-defendants after this suit had been filed, claiming a decree for a judicial winding up and for an account. It was not proved that the plaintiff had ever relinquished his claim upon the assignors as a partner, though he might have been aware of the assignment. The two added defendants appeared in the Court below, but not upon this appeal. Held that the facts were sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to have the winding up of the partnership and the account decreed against all the four. The suit had been dismissed by the Recorder as having been prematurely brought before the complete execution of a decree, already obtained, before this suit was filed, by the plaintiff-appellant, against the borrowers of the money; that decree having followed upon an award of arbitrators which directed that all sums realized in the adventure should be divided in equal moieties between the plaintiff and the original defendants. Held that this suit ought to have been allowed to proceed, and should not have been dismissed. The plaintiff having, on this appeal, agreed to account for all money received by him in the transaction; an account should be directed with a declaration that the added defendants were jointly and severally liable to account with the first and second defendants for what had been received by them from the adventure. *DOMATY NURBIAH v. 41. — Suits by different partners for specific sums of money on adjustment of accounts—Accounts adjusted by Amin appointed in previous suits—Contract Act, s. 285—Plaint, Amendment of, under s. 53, Civil Procedure Code, 1882.—After dissolution of a certain partnership, two separate suits were brought in 1889 by different partners for specific sums of money due to them, and, in the alternative, for such other amount as might be found due on an adjustment of accounts. Objections were raised against these suits on the grounds, inter alia, (1) that the suits were barred by the provisions of s. 285 of the Indian Contract Act; (2) that separate suits for the same matter were not maintainable; (3) that the suits would not lie in the Munsif's Court; and (4) that accounts having been already adjusted, there was no cause of action. The Munsif overruled the first three objections, and held, as regards the fourth, that the adjustment pleaded had been ratified by the plaintiffs; he appointed an Amin, who examined the accounts and ascertained the respective claims of the partners, and the plaintiffs in those suits obtained decrees on the basis of the Amin's adjustment of account. The present suits were brought in 1891 by certain other partners, who were defendants in the suits of 1889, on the allegation that the partnership account had been already adjusted by the Amin appointed in the suits of 1889, and that the debts and dues of all parties had been determined by the Court. The plaintiffs prayed for recovery of the amount due to them under the Amin's adjustment and, in the alternative, for such other relief as might be deemed proper by the Court to grant them against any of the defendants. Held by NORRIS and BANERJEE, JJ. (RAMPINI, J., dissenting), that the suits were correctly framed, and that such defects as there were in the plaint, viz., an incorrect statement as to the dues of all the partners having been determined in the former suit, and the omission of an alternative prayer for an account, were no bar to the maintenance of the present actions. *Taylor v. 42. — Advance made by one partner to another in respect of the latter's share of partnership debt—Suit for contribution.—A and B were partners. A decree was passed against them for the payment of a certain debt, each partner being liable for the whole sum, and being bound to indemnify the other against the payment of more than his share. A paid B's share as well as his own and brought a suit against B for contribution. B contended that A's claim, being in respect of a partnership transaction, ought to be adjusted when the partnership account was settled, and that the suit did not lie. Held that the advance made by A to B by paying his share was not an advance to the partnership, but to the other partner in respect of what he had to contribute, and that consequently A was entitled to contribution from B. *SUBBARAYUDU v. Adultery of one partner with the wife of his co-partner is a sufficient ground for dissolution of the partnership. ABBOTT v. CRUMP 5 B. L. R., 109

44. ——— Death of partner—Deed of partnership—Contract Act, s. 253, cl. 10.—Where one party (A) advanced money to others to carry on business, and an instrument was executed whereby the latter agreed and bound themselves to account yearly to the former for a share of the profits, the transaction was held to amount to an agreement that A should be a party to the business pro tanto. Held that by the operation of the Contract Act of 1872, s. 253, cl. 10, the partnership between A and the others was dissolved by the death of A, and that the representatives of A, by receiving, some six months after his death, an account with a portion of the money advanced and of the profits, did not reconstitute partnership, but rather indicated an opposite intention. *PEER MAHOMED v. If no assent is given by the other partners to the assignment, the assignee is on dissolution at liberty to sue for an account and for distribution, not as a partner, but as assignee of the right of his assignor in the partnership property. 46. ——— Right of co-partners to dissolve—Renunciation of right.—A contract between a partner and his co-partners for remuneration to the former for the management of the partnership business by a commission on the sale, during his lifetime, does not, in the absence of any express agreement to that effect, imply a renunciation of the right of the co-partners to dissolve the partnership if they find that it cannot be carried on except at a loss; nor does it imply an obligation to pay the managing partner compensation in case the partnership is dissolved for that reason. *Rhodes v. 48. ——— Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 264.—S. 264 of the Contract Act is not intended to be an exhaustive exposition on the question of notice of a dissolution of partnership. The mode of notification of dissolution required in the case of old customers, who are known to the firm as having dealt with it, is an express or specific notice by circular or otherwise. But in the case of the general public the most effectual public notice which can reasonably be given is requisite. Roop Chand Pandit v. Madhub Chander Boss, I. L. 49. ——— Effect of dissolution as against party without notice.—Held that dissolution between the members of a carrier's firm or exclusion of one of the members thereof by others in virtue of a partnership agreement would not operate against a third party (a consignor) who had no knowledge of it, and who in his dealing with the firm, in the absence of any notification of change, supposed that the partnership continued unaltered as to its members; and that such dissolution or exclusion would not exempt the retired member of the firm from liability to the consignor's claim, unless it be shown that the latter was aware of the fact of the former having ceased to be a member thereof. GUNGA RAM v. GUNGA DHUR 1 Agra, 198

50. ——— Contract Act s. 264—Sleeping partner.—A, B, and C traded together in partnership as B C & Co., A being a sleeping partner. After the partnership was dissolved, B and C continued to trade together under the same name and incurred debts to the plaintiffs, who sued to recover the amounts from A, B, and C. The plaintiffs had not dealt with the old partnership, nor received notice of its dissolution, and it was not alleged that they knew of A's previous connection with it. Held that the suits did not lie against A. RAMASAMI v. KADAR BIBI

——— Grazing—Bom. Act I of 1865, s. 32—“Village cattle.”—Plaintiff erected a hut on public ground in a village in the district of Thana, and lived there annually for a few months while his cattle grazed on the public grazing ground in that village. He was not the owner or lessee of any land in the village. On being prevented by the Collector of Thana from thus grazing his cattle, plaintiff brought a suit against that officer for a declaration of his right to graze his cattle within the limits, not only of that village, but of any other village in the district of Thana. Held that plaintiff was not entitled to any such right. The phrase “village cattle” in s. 32 of Bombay Act I of 1865 does not include the cattle of any roving grazier who may choose to squat for a few months on the public ground of a village. That Act does not vest the right of sanctioning such a diversion of the village grazing ground in the villagers themselves, but in the Revenue Commissioner, whose consent must be obtained. *COLLECTOR OF THANA v. 2. — Suit for infringement of patent—Act XV of 1859, s. 25—Substantial difference in machinery—Injunction—Damages and account of profits.—The fact that a machine has been several times improved since the original patent was obtained is no argument against its being a useful invention within s. 25, Act XV of 1859. Cunnington v. Nattal, L. R., 5 H. L., 205, followed as to the test of "novelty" in an invention. In deciding whether a machine, patented as an entire invention, is an imitation and piracy of another machine previously patented as an entire invention, the question is,—Is the later patented machine substantially the same as the earlier one? The fact of considerable differences existing in the several parts of the two machines will not prevent the latter machine from being, as a whole, a copy of the earlier one; even where an exclusive privilege might have been acquired had the alterations in the later machine been claimed as improvements on the earlier one. Clark v. Adie, 2 App. Cas., 315, followed. Where a patent has been obtained for a machine which the patentee subsequently somewhat improves, a subsequent specification claiming the improved machine as a novel combination is bad, though the improvement might be claimed and protected as such. Where a new arrangement of the parts of a machine is claimed as an improvement, the arrangement must be clearly described in the specification. The mere substitution of one mechanical equivalent for another already in use will not protect it. Where a case of infringement of a patent has been made out, an injunction will follow as a matter of course. A plaintiff cannot pray for an account of profits and for damages. He must elect between the two remedies. If the plaintiff elects to take an account of the profits, such accounts will only be carried back to the period of one year before the filing of the plaint, in accordance with Act IX of 1871, art. 11. KINMOND v. 4. — Particulars of infringements, Sufficiency of—Practice—Act XV of 1859, s. 34—Stat. 15 & 16 Vict., c. 95 (Patent Law Amendment Act, 1852), s. 41.—In a suit for the infringement of certain inventions the plaintiff did not, as required by s. 34 of Act XV of 1859, deliver with his plaint particulars of the breaches complained of in the suit. In his plaint, after describing his inventions, he alleged generally that the defendant had made and used them at a certain place without his license. Held that, as required by s. 34 of Act XV of 1859, the plaintiff should have delivered with his plaint particulars of the breaches complained of; that the general allegation as to infringement contained in the plaint did not amount to such particulars; and that under these circumstances the plaintiff came into Court with a case which could not be tried. PETMAN v. BULL . I. L. R., 5 All., 371

In the same case, on appeal to the Privy Council,—Held the sole object of Act XV of 1859, s. 34, corresponding with s. 41 of the English Patent Law Amendment Act, 1852, is to give the defendant fair notice of the case which he has to meet, and it is quite immaterial whether the requisite information be given in the plaint itself or in a separate paper. Talbot v. La Roche, 15 C. B., 310, and Needham v. Oxley, 1 H. & M., 248, approved. Particulars of breaches must be distinguished from particulars of objections for want of novelty. In the latter case the particular instances may not be within the knowledge of the patentee and must be specified: in the former the defendant must know whether and in what respect he has been guilty of infringement. Where three patents of the plaintiff all related to one article,—a kiln for burning bricks,—and the second and third in date were for improvements upon the invention specified in the first, and the plaintiff alleged a particular kiln constructed and used by the defendant, and in his plaint not only referred to his patents, but indicated in the case of each of them the infringements of which he complained,—Held, reversing the decision of the High Court, that this was a sufficient compliance with the Act. LEDGARD v. [4 Bom., A. C., 39

11. ——— Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 308—Limitation.—Where an application for permission to sue in forma pauperis is numbered and registered, and deemed to be the plaint in the suit, not in consequence of proof of the plaintiff's pauperism, but in consequence of his abandoning his claim to sue as a pauper and paying for the stamps required for the institution of the suit, the date of such payment, and not the date of the application, must be taken, in computing the period of limitation, to be the date of the presentation of the plaint and the institution of the suit. SKINNER v. ORDE

12. ——— Enquiry into pauperism—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 310—Limitation Act, 1859, s. 14—Deduction of time—Presentation of plaint in wrong Court—Institution of suit.—The plaintiff applied by petition, on 20th February 1873, to the Subordinate Judge of Meerut for leave to sue in forma pauperis. The petition contained a statement of the claim and such particulars as are required in a plaint, and a prayer that, as part of the immoveable property claimed was situated in the Punjab, the Subordinate Judge would seek the necessary sanction to give him jurisdiction. The Subordinate Judge, considering that the suit should be instituted in the Delhi district, rejected the application. On 3rd March the plaintiff presented the petition to the Deputy Commissioner of Delhi, and was admitted by that officer to sue as a pauper. The Deputy Commissioner having applied for sanction to try the suit, the High Court, North-Western Provinces, and the Chief Court of the Punjab considered it advisable that the suit should be tried at Meerut; and on 10th June 1873 the Deputy Commissioner returned the petition for presentation in the proper Court in the North-Western Provinces. On 19th July the plaintiff presented it to the Subordinate Judge of Meerut, who received and registered it as a plaint. On 10th November the defendants filed written statements, wherein they urged that the plaintiff ought not to be allowed to sue in forma pauperis until he had proved his pauperism in the

Subordinate Judge's Court. Upon this the Subordinate Judge threw out the suit, holding that he had no jurisdiction to admit it. Held that the Subordinate Judge, if he regarded as ineffectual the order of the Deputy Commissioner admitting plaintiff to sue as a pauper, should himself have entered into an inquiry into the plaintiff's pauperism, and not have thrown out the suit. Held also that the provisions of s. 840 of Act VIII of 1859 were not applicable to the order of the Subordinate Judge refusing to allow the plaintiff to sue as a pauper, as he pronounced no opinion on the point. Held also, with reference to the question of limitation, that the time during which the suit was pending in the Delhi Court should be deducted in computing the period of limitation. Semble—That the order admitting the plaintiff to sue as a pauper, which was made by the Delhi Court, became ineffectual when the plaint was returned by that Court; and that it became the duty of the Meerut Court, when the petition was again presented to it, to pass orders de novo on the subject. *SKINER alias MIRZA v. 16. ————— Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 304, 306—Procedure.—Where a petition in a suit in forma pauperis had been admitted, the usual order made under s. 305, Act VIII of 1859, and the case came on for hearing under s. 306, it was proposed for the defendant to show by examination of the plaintiff that, on the facts stated in the petition, she had no cause of action, and it was objected that no question except the pauperism of the plaintiff could be gone into under s. 306. The Court allowed the plaintiff to be examined to show that on her own evidence she had no cause of action, but refused to allow other witnesses to be called upon. From the plaintiff's evidence the defendant failed to show that there was no cause of action. TARAMONY DABEN v. HURRO MOHUN CHATTERJEE where it was held that where, on the day fixed for hearing evidence on the question of pauperism, the defendant brings to the notice of the Court any ground on which it would have been bound to refuse to admit the petition, it is in the discretion of the Court to admit or refuse to receive evidence of such ground.

17. ————— Civil Procedure Code, s. 401, Explanation, and s. 407.—On an application to sue in forma pauperis the Court is required to deal with the question of the applicant's pauperism with reference to the definition of that word as given in the explanation to s. 401 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and in deciding it to ascertain the exact property, its market value, and the title thereto, and then to deal with the case under s. 407 of the Code, irrespective of any surmises as to the reason why the applicant has valued his claim at a high figure. MUHAMMAD HUSAIN v. AJUDHIA PRASAD . . . 1 L. R., 10 All., 467

18. ————— Application for leave to sue as a pauper—Property admitted by the respondent to be the property of petitioners not the "subject-matter of the suit" although claimed in the petition—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 401, 408, 409, 410.—The petitioners prayed to be allowed as paupers to sue the respondent for certain property specified in the schedule annexed to their petition. At the hearing of the petition under ss. 408 and 409 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) the respondent appeared and deposited in Court some of the articles claimed by the petitioners to which he admitted they were entitled. The value of the articles deposited was ₹100. The petitioners acknowledged that the articles were their property, but declined to take possession of them. Held that the petitioners were not paupers as defined by s. 401 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), being possessed of property worth ₹100 other than the subject-matter of the suit, and that they could not therefore be allowed to sue as paupers. The inquiry into pauperism under ss. 408 and 409 takes place before any suit is in existence; for, until an application to sue as a pauper is granted, there is no plaint, and consequently no suit (see s. 410). Any property therefore found at such inquiry not to be really in dispute cannot be regarded as part of the "subject-matter of the suit," although it may be entered in the particulars of the application for leave to sue as a pauper. The ground for excluding the "subject-matter of the suit" under s. 401 is because such property is presumably out of the petitioner's reach, and cannot be made use of by him to carry on his litigation. In the present case the articles deposited in Court were freely at the disposal of the petitioners, and could not therefore be excluded from consideration. *DWARAKANATH NARAYAN v. 19. ——— Ground for rejecting petition—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 407—Rejection of application to sue as a pauper.—The terms of s. 407 (c) of the Code must not be read as limiting the Court's discretion to merely ascertaining whether the "right to sue" arose within its jurisdiction, but have a more extended meaning, namely, that an applicant must make out that he has a good subsisting cause of action, capable of enforcement in Court, and calling for an answer, and not barred by the law of limitation or any other law. Also per MAHMOOD, J.—The provisions of s. 407 must be interpreted strictly, inasmuch as they operate in derogation of the right possessed by every litigant to seek the aid of the Courts of Justice; and an exercise of jurisdiction under that section, when such exercise of jurisdiction is open to the objection of illegality or material irregularity, would form a proper subject of revision by the High Court. *Har Prasad v. It appeared that they entered into an agreement with a vakil to pay him, as remuneration for his services as vakil in the case, a lump sum of ₹1,500 as soon as the case was decided. In default of payment, the vakil was authorized to recover the money out of the revenues of the said village. Held that such an agreement was within the scope of cl. She stated as her cause of action that a young girl had been left in her charge and had been maintained by her for a number of years; that in January 1888 arrangements had been made with a Bhatia to get this girl married, and that she (the plaintiff) was to receive ₹2,500 on the marriage; that the defendant had also agreed to pay her (the plaintiff) ₹2,000 if she would give the girl to him in marriage; that before the marriage ceremony could be performed, the defendant had induced the girl to quit the plaintiff's house for immoral purposes. She claimed ₹2,500 as damages, and prayed leave to sue as a pauper. Held, following *Chattarpal Singh v. Raja Ram, I. L. After investigation, the Court, on the 15th July 1890, refused leave, but on the plaintiff's application granted him time to pay the Court-fees. He paid the fees on the 12th August 1890. At this date the suit was barred, and the defendant pleaded limitation. The plaintiff contended that the suit should be taken as instituted at the date of his application for leave to sue as a pauper. The lower Court held the suit barred, and dismissed it. Held, confirming the decree, that the plaintiff's application to sue as a pauper having been disposed of under s. 409 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), there was no proceeding pending which could be continued and kept alive by the payment of Court-fees. On the rejection of an application for leave to sue as a pauper, the only course open to the applicant is that declared in s. 413, viz., to institute a suit, and the date of the institution of that suit for the purposes of limitation is the actual date thereof. The plaintiff could not then be regarded as a pauper, and s. 4 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) would have no application. KESHAV RAMOHANDRA v. KRISHNARAO VENKATESH

As he did not proceed with the application, it was rejected with costs on the 29th November 1888. On the 4th February 1890, plaintiff again applied for leave to sue as a pauper for the redemption of the same mortgage. There being no opposition, the application was granted, and was registered as a suit. On the 20th September 1893, when the suit had been heard nearly to the end, the Government pleader intervened, and applied that it should not be allowed to proceed further until the plaintiff had paid the costs incurred by Government in opposing the first application, which had been rejected. But the plaintiff refused to do so, and thereupon the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit with costs under s. 413 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), and ordered the plaintiff to pay the Court-fees under s. 412. Held, on appeal, (1) that the order rejecting plaintiff's first application was an order under s. 409 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (2) that both the applications were made in respect of the same right to sue; (3) that the order rejecting the first application operated as a bar under s. 413 of the Code to the entertainment of the second application; and (4) that such bar being one to the jurisdiction of the Court, the Subordinate Judge was not only competent, but bound to take notice of it at any stage of the suit. RANCHOD MORAR v. 32. Claim of Government for costs of suit—Stamps in pauper suit.—Where Government, after attaching a pauper plaintiff's decree in order to recover the value of stamps, under s. 309 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1859, consents to the sale of the decree in execution of another decree against the pauper, and obtains an order by which it secures the chance of any surplus arising from such sale, it cannot afterwards, when the sale is found to yield no surplus, be heard to say, as against the purchaser, that the decree was sold subject to its claim for stamps. The amount of stamps in a pauper case cannot be claimed as a lien or charge upon the decree in favour of Government, but is recoverable in the same manner as the costs of suit; Government being, as regards its claim in such a case, in no higher position than an ordinary judgment-creditor. PRANKRISTO ROY v. After the presentation of the plaint in another Court and before the termination of the suit, the Collector applied to the Subordinate Judge for execution of the order as to costs, by seeking to recover the amount of the stamp duty from the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge refused to execute the order, on the ground that the pauper suit was still pending in another Court. His order was affirmed by the District Judge on appeal. On second appeal to the High Court,—Held that, under s. 412 of Act X of 1877, the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to make the order for payment of Court-fees by the plaintiff. The High Court accordingly, in the exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction, annulled the Subordinate Judge's order about costs and all the subsequent proceedings consequent upon that order. *COLLECTOR OF RATNAGIRI v. decree.—A plaintiff suing in formd pauperis to recover property valued at Rs60,000 obtained a decree for Rs1,439. The Court, with reference to the provisions of s. 411 of the Civil Procedure Code, directed that the plaintiff should pay Rs1,196 as the amount of Court-fees which would have been paid by him if he had not been permitted to sue as a pauper. The Collector having applied under s. 411 to recover this amount by attachment of the Rs1,439 payable to the plaintiff, the defendant objected that (i) certain costs payable to her by the plaintiff under the same decree, and (ii) a sum of money payable to her by the plaintiff under a decree which he had obtained in a cross-suit in the same Court, should be set off against the Rs1,439 payable by her to him, with reference to ss. 246 and 247 of the Code, and that thus nothing would remain due by her which the Government could recover. No application for execution was made by the plaintiff for his Rs1,439 or by the defendant for her costs. On appeal from an order allowing the Collector's application, it was contended that the 'subject-matter of the suit' in s. 411 of the Code meant the sum which the successful pauper-plaintiff is entitled to get as a result of his success in the suit; but that in the suit and the cross-suit taken together, the plaintiff ultimately stood to lose a small sum, the defendant being the holder of the larger sum awarded altogether. Held that the contention had no force, as execution had not been taken out by the plaintiff or the defendant or both, and it could not be said that the Government had been trying to execute the plaintiff's decree, or was a representative of the plaintiff as holder of the decretal order in his favour for Rs1,439, so as to bring into operation the special rules of ss. 246 and 247 of the Code between him and the defendant. Held also that the plaintiff was one who, in the sense of s. 411, had succeeded in respect of part of the "subject-matter" of his suit, and on that part therefore a first charge was by law reserved and secured to the Government, which was justified in recovering it in these proceedings from the defendant, who was ordered by the decree to pay it in the same way as costs are ordinarily recoverable under the Code. Held that the decrees in the suit and the cross-suit not having reached a stage in which the provisions of ss. 246 and 247 of the Code would come into play, no questions of set-off and consequent reduction or other modification of the "subject-matter" of the suit decreed against the defendant as payable by her to the plaintiff had arisen or could be entertained. *JANKI v. to the payment of Court-fees. Thereupon the Collector applied to the High Court, under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), to direct the lower Court to make an order for the payment of Court-fees under s. 412 of the Code. Held that the Collector, though not a party to the suit, was entitled to move the High Court under s. 622 of the Code. Held also that s. 412 had no application to the present case, as there was no adjudication of the rights of the parties, and the plaintiff could not therefore be said to have failed in the suit. The Subordinate Judge had therefore no jurisdiction to make the order desired by the Collector. S. 412 of the Code applies only to cases of adjudicated failure and to the other cases specified, as where the plaintiff has been dispaupered, or where the suit has been dismissed under s. 97 or s. 98. COLLECTOR OF KANARA v. 42. ——— Stamp duty on a pauper's plaint—Civil Procedure Code, s. 411—Decree for less than the amount of claim—Disreputable defence.—A pauper sued his sister for the partition of property valued at a large sum. The parties belonged to the Bogam caste, residing in the Godavari district. The defendant pleaded that the property had been acquired by her as a prostitute, and denied the plaintiff's claim to it. The plaintiff obtained a decree for Rs. 100, being a moiety of the property found to have been left by their mother. Held that the defendant was liable to pay Court-fees only on the sum decreed. CHANDRABENKA v. The Secretary of State, not having been a party to the litigation in the Court below, then preferred an appeal in respect of the Court-fee on that portion of the plaintiff's claim which had been dismissed. Held that such an appeal would lie,

The decree, however, omitted to order the recovery from the plaintiff of the Court-fees payable on the plaint. The Collector applied to the High Court under its extra ordinary jurisdiction for the rectification of the decree. It was contended that, as the omission might have been remedied by an appeal or on review, the Collector could not apply under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the Court. Held, on the authority of the Collector of Ratnagiri v. Jamardan, I. L. R., 6 Bom., 590, that no appeal by Government would lie in the case, and that, in the exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction, the High Court would rectify the decree by directing the plaintiff to pay the costs of Government. The provisions in s. 342, which make it discretionary in the Appellate Court to demand security for costs, is not applicable to appeals in formd pauperis; and therefore the order of the Judge in this case requiring security for costs from the petitioner after his appeal had been admitted, and after the Judge on inquiry had found that the appellant was a pauper, was set aside. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. Thereupon the plaintiffs preferred an appeal in formd pauperis to the High Court. Pending the appeal, the parties entered into a compromise, under which it was agreed (inter alia) that the appeal should be withdrawn, and that the respondent should pay to Government the Court-fees which the plaintiffs were liable to pay both in the first Court and in the Court of appeal. When the appeal came on for hearing, the appellants informed the Court of their intention to withdraw from the appeal. Thereupon the Government pleader intervened, and applied for an order directing the respondent to pay, in accordance with the terms of the compromise, all the costs payable to Government on account of institution fees, etc., in the first Court as well as in the Appellate Court. This application was opposed by both parties. The Government pleader then moved the Court to dispauper the appellants under s. 414 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). Held that, the appeal having been withdrawn, no order could be made either under s. 412 or under s. 414 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held

6. ———— Payment to stay sale in execution of decree—Suit to recover.—Certain property which had been mortgaged to the plaintiff by a bond executed by J D on 25th February 1867 was sold to him in execution of a decree passed upon that bond on 3rd September 1868. Before such sale, but after the above mortgage, the property was attached by the first defendant, in execution of a decree of 1865 (i.e., J D's equity of redemption was attached), and a part of the property was sold. The sale was set aside for irregularity, but the attachment remaining, the first defendant resumed proceedings in execution and got an order for sale, when the plaintiff released it from liability to such sale by paying into Court the money due, which he now sought to recover. Held that the first defendant had a right to sell the right and interest of J D in the property, and was therefore entitled to keep the money which saved the sale. GOSSAIN MUNRAJ POOREE v. More than four years later, he brought a further suit against S to recover the interest due under the same bond. Meanwhile plaintiffs also lent money to S under a bond by which the same property was pledged, and also recovered a decree in execution of which the property was sold. P then proceeded to attach the same property in execution of his second decree, when plaintiffs objected under Act VIII of 1859, s. 246, but ineffectually; and after that, to protect the property which they had purchased, they paid a sum of money into Court which was subsequently taken out by P. They now sued to recover that money. Held that, under the circumstances, the payment of the money into Court was not a voluntary payment, and the plaintiffs were entitled to recover it. MUTHOORA MOHUN ROY CHOWDHRY v. On the 17th June he paid in the amount to the Post Office at Yellapur, and obtained a money order which he sent to the Nazir of the Court. The Nazir did not receive the money until the 22nd June. Held that the payment was not in time. The Post Office is not the agent of the Court, and the purchaser was bound to see that the money reached the Court in time to satisfy the requirements of s. 307. RAMCHANDRA KRISHNAPA v. BELYA . I. Both parties appealed against this order, but pending the appeals the defendant paid the amount into Court. The plaintiff, however, refused to take it, on the ground that he had appealed against the order under which it was paid in, and the Court subsequently passed an order that the money should be returned to the defendant. But before this could be done, the money was attached by a third person, in execution of his decree against the defendant, and a few days afterwards the money was paid over to him. Shortly afterwards the appeal against the order directing the defendant to pay Rs 140-8-0 to the plaintiff was heard and the order was confirmed. Thereupon the plaintiffs applied in execution (inter alia) for payment of the sum of Rs 140-8-0. The defendant contended that he had already paid it. The Subordinate Judge directed the defendant to pay this sum into Court within one month. The defendant appealed to the District Court, who confirmed the order of the Subordinate Judge. The defendant then appealed to the High Court. Held that the orders of the lower Courts should be reversed. When the defendant paid the Rs 140-8-0 into Court in execution of the decree, the Court held the money on account of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff, who had not obtained a stay of execution, could not refuse to take it, because an appeal was pending. The plaintiff's refusal, therefore, to take the money out of Court did not justify the Subordinate Judge in treating the money as the defendant's and in ordering it to be paid to another judgment-creditor of the defendant without his having in any way expressed his assent to the money being so treated. LAKSHMAN DADAJI v. On the occasion of a fire in the city of Ahmednagar, he and the rest of his company turned out to assist in extinguishing it. He with other sepoys was stationed by their officer with orders to keep clear a space in front of the burning house, and not to allow any one not in uniform to intrude on that space. The police under the city chief constable were also engaged at the fire, and on some one of them coming round from the rear, they were warned off by the sentries. voluntarily causing hurt under s. 823 of the Penal Code. In evidence it appeared that the police attempted to force the military guard, which had been posted as above stated, and it was further proved that the chief constable was not in uniform, and that the accused did not know who he was. It was not alleged that the kick was unnecessarily violent. Held that the conviction was bad. The Magistrate having found that the chief constable was not in uniform, and that the accused did not know who he was, the kick was justifiable as given in good faith for the purpose of preventing much greater harm under s. 81 of the Indian Penal Code, and as a means of acting up to the military order. *QUEEN-EMPERESS v. The circumstances of a case may disclose such a degree of malice as to justify the application of the maxim malitia supplet aetatem. QUEEN v. AIMONA

2. ——— Capacity of understanding to commit offence.—An objection that the accused is of such an age as not to have attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge of the nature and consequences of his conduct is not one of a preliminary character, but rather a matter of defence to be considered with the other issues arising in the case. Where the accused is over seven years of age and under twelve, the incapacity to commit an offence only arises where the child has not attained sufficient maturity, etc.: such non-attainment would have apparently to be specially pleaded and proved. The "consequences of his conduct" mentioned in s. 83, Penal Code, are not the penal consequences to the offender, but the natural consequences which flow from a voluntary act. *QUEEN v. 2. ——— Evidence—Writings showing intention or animus—Letters of contributors published in newspapers—Disaffection.—The accused, who was the editor, proprietor, and publisher of the "Kesari" newspaper, was charged under s. 124A of the Penal Code with exciting, and attempting to excite, feelings of disaffection to Government by the publication of certain articles, etc., in the "Kesari" in its issue of the 15th June 1897. In order to show the intention of such publications, counsel for the prosecution tendered in evidence a certain letter signed "Ganesh" which appeared in the issue of the "Kesari" of May 4, 1897. Objection was taken that it was not admissible, inasmuch as letters to newspapers often express opinions which are not the opinions of the editor and publisher. Held that the letter was admissible to show intention and animus. S. 124A of the Penal Code explained. Meaning of the word "disaffection." QUEEN-EMPERESS v. BAL GANGADHAR TIHAK I. L. R., 22 Bom., 112

3. ——— Seditious publication—Disaffection.—The word "disaffection" in s. 124A of the Penal Code is used in a special sense as meaning political alienation or discontent, a spirit of disloyalty to the Government or existing authority. An attempt to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government is equivalent to an attempt to produce political hatred of Government as established by law, to excite political discontent, and alienate the people from their allegiance. This meaning of the word "disaffection" in the main portion of the section is not varied by the explanation. Per PARSONS, J.—The word "disaffection" used in s. 124A of the Indian Penal Code cannot be construed as meaning an absence of, or the contrary of, affection or love, that is to say, dislike or hatred, but is used in its special sense as signifying political alienation or discontent, that is to say, a feeling of disloyalty to the existing Government which tends to a disposition not to obey, but to resist and subvert the Government. Per BANADE, J.—"Disaffection" is not a mere absence or negation of love or good-will, but a positive feeling of aversion which is akin to disloyalty, a defiant insubordination of authority, or when it is not defiant, it secretly seeks to alienate the people and weaken the bond of allegiance and prepossesses the minds of the people with avowed or secret animosity to Government,—a feeling which tends to bring the Government into hatred or contempt by imputing base and corrupt motives to it, and makes them indisposed to obey or support the laws of the realm, and which promotes discontent and public disorder. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAMCHANDRA NARAYAN

—continued.

4. ——— Exciting disaffection—

Meaning of the term "disaffection" explained.—Any one who, by any of the means referred to in s. 124A of the Penal Code, excites, or attempts to excite, feelings of hatred, dislike, ill-will, enmity, or hostility towards the Government established by law in British India, excites or attempts to excite, as the case may be, feelings of "disaffection" as that term is used in s. 124A. Such feelings are necessarily inconsistent with and incompatible with a disposition to render obedience to the lawful authority of Government and to support that Government against unlawful attempts to subvert or resist it. The term "disaffection" may be taken as synonymous with "disloyalty." The ordinary meaning of the term "disaffection" as used in s. 124A is not varied by the explanation appended to that section. When a person is charged with having committed the offence punishable under s. 124A of the Penal Code, his intention may be inferred from one particular speech, article, or letter, or from that speech, article, or letter considered in conjunction with what such person has said, written, or published on another or other occasions. Where it is ascertained that the intention of such person was to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government established by law in British India, it is immaterial whether or not the words spoken, written, or published could have the effect of exciting such feelings of disaffection, and it is immaterial whether the words were true or were false, and, except on the question of punishment, or in a case in which the speaker, writer, or publisher is charged with having excited such feelings of disaffection, it is immaterial whether or not the words did in fact excite such feelings of disaffection. Queen-Empress v. Jogendra Chunder Bose, I. L. R., 19 Calc., 35; In re the petition of Bal Gangadhar Tilak, I. L. R., 22 Bom., 112, referred to. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. AMBA PRASAD, I. L. R., 20 All., 55

— s. 153—Wantonly giving provocation with intent to cause riot—Abetment of riot by the public—Penal Code, s. 117.—In August 1893 a riot took place in Bombay between Hindus and Musalmans. The excitement caused by the riot had not entirely subsided, when the accused composed and published a poem, giving an account of the outbreak, and incidentally, extolling certain classes of the Hindu community, namely, the Ghatis and Kamatis, for the brave resistance which they had offered to the Mahomedan rioters. The poem extolled the Ghatis and Kamatis, and then followed these lines: "May God give glory to you, confer joy on you, night and day! Fight again for your country's good! Brave, brave are the Kamatis! Why fear for dying, brother, why fear for dying? Sooner or later, but only once, a man has to die." The poem was written in Gujarati, a language not ordinarily spoken by the Ghatris and Kamatis, or even by the Mahomedans. It did not appear that any copies of the work were distributed among the people who had taken part in the riot, nor did any fresh riot take place subsequently to the publication of the work. The accused were prosecuted and convicted under ss. 117 and 153 of the Penal Code (XLV of 1860) on the ground that the lines quoted above, specially the words "Fight again," were a direct instigation to the Ghatris and Kamatis to renew the disturbances. Held that the meaning of the passages complained of was to be gathered from the whole poem. The general spirit of the poem was clearly in favour of peace and reconciliation. It consisted from beginning to end of a lamentation over the riots, and the destruction and death they had caused, and of repeated counsel to peace and harmony between Hindus and Mahomedans. And there was nothing to indicate that the author's intention was to instigate the Hindus or provoke the Mahomedans to renew the disturbances. The words "Fight again" were no doubt objectionable, but it would not be a proper construction of the words to allow them to override the whole context of the work. The composition could not be regarded as an "illegal act," and its publication was not "malignant" or "wanton" within the meaning of s. 153 of the Penal Code. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KAHANJI

1. ——— False information to the police—Charge made against no specific person—Specific charge.—S. 182 of the Penal Code must be read as an entire section, and, when so read, it applies to those cases in which the police are induced, upon information supplied to them, to do or omit to do something which might affect some third person, and which they would not have done had they known the truth of the matter laid before them. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF GOLAM AHMED KAZI

2. ——— Giving false information to a public servant.—Under s. 182 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), the giving of false information to a public servant is penal, when either of two consequences is intended to be caused or is known to be likely to be caused by the false information, the first being the causing the public servant "to use the lawful power of such public servant to the injury or annoyance of any person," the second being the causing the public servant "to do or omit anything which such public servant ought not to do or omit, if the true state of facts respecting which such information is given were known to him." To constitute an offence under the latter part of the section, it is not necessary to show that the act done would be to the injury or annoyance of any third person. A personated B at an examination, called the Vernacular Sixth Standard Examination. A passed the examination, and obtained a certificate from the educational authorities in B's name. B thereupon applied to the Assistant Collector to have his name entered in the list of candidates for service in the Revenue Department. He attached to this application the certificate issued in his name, as it was a rule of Government that only those who had passed the Sixth Standard Examination were eligible for employment in the Revenue Department. On receipt of this application, the Assistant Collector ordered B's name to be entered on the list of candidates. Held that B was guilty of the offence of giving false information to a public servant within the meaning of the latter part of s. 182 of the Penal Code. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GANESH KHANDERAO

4. ——— Giving false information to public servant—Definition of offence provided for in s. 182 explained.—In order to constitute the offence defined in s. 182 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary that the public servant to whom false information is given should be induced to do anything or to omit to do anything in consequence of such information. The gist of the offence is not what action may or may not be taken by the public servant to whom false information is given; but the intention or knowledge (to be inferred from his conduct) of the person supplying such information. *In the matter of the petition of Gulam Ahmed Kasi, I. X of the Penal Code, without the permission of such public servant; the law looking upon the conduct of the person who gives the false information as an offence, not against the individual charged, but against the public servant to whom the false information was given. 13. ——— and s. 211.—Prosecution under s. 182—Complaint—Rejection with reference to police report.—K made a report at a police station accusing R of a certain offence. The police having reported to the Magistrate having jurisdiction in the matter that in their opinion the offence was not established, the Magistrate ordered the case to be “shelved.” K then preferred a complaint to the Magistrate again accusing R of the offence. The Magistrate rejected the complaint with reference to the police report. Subsequently R, with the sanction of the police authorities, instituted criminal proceedings against K, under s. 182 of the Penal Code, in respect of the report which he had made at the police station, and K was convicted under that section. Held that K’s conviction under s. 182 of the Penal Code was illegal, as the Magistrate had no power to entertain a complaint under that section at the instance of R, the application of s. 182 and the institution of prosecutions under it being limited to the public servant against whom the offence has been committed or to his official superior, as mentioned in s. 487 of Act X of 1872, and it not being intended that those provisions should be enforced at the instance of private persons. Moreover, if K’s complaint was false, his offence was against R, and not against the public servant to whom the complaint was made, and fell within s. 211 of the Penal Code. EMPERESS v. S. 195, Criminal Procedure Code, clearly shows that a complaint directly made by a public servant mentioned therein is quite as sufficient as his sanction. Emperess of India v. Radha Kishan, I. 7. ——— Voluntarily obstructing a public servant in discharge of his duties—Mamlatdar's decree—Execution by a surveyor under Collector's orders—Public function—Right of private defence.—In a suit filed in a Mamlatdar's Court under Bombay Act III of 1876, the plaintiff obtained a decree against the accused for possession of a certain piece of land. When the Mamlatdar proceeded to execute the decree, he found that there was no land corresponding to the boundaries set forth in the plaint, and that the parties were joint owners and in joint occupation of the land in dispute. Finding himself unable to execute the decree, the Mamlatdar referred the matter to the Collector for advice. The Collector, on looking into the papers of the case, ordered a surveyor to execute the decree by dividing the land in dispute and putting the decree-holder in possession of his share. The surveyor, in attempting to execute the decree, was obstructed by the accused, who was thereupon tried and convicted of the offence of voluntarily obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his public functions, under s. 186 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). Held, reversing the conviction, that, as the Collector had no legal

The mere fact of a public servant or railway servant believing he was acting in the discharge of his duties or public functions is not sufficient to make resistance or obstruction to him amount to an offence. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF BARODA KANTO PRAMANICK

12. ———— Obstructing public servant in discharge of his public functions—Ameen, Power of, to measure lands in butwarra proceedings—Public functions—Estates Partition Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1876), ss. 112 and 116.—The public functions contemplated by s. 186 of the Penal Code mean legal or legitimately authorised public functions, and were not intended to cover any act that a public functionary might choose to take upon himself to perform. A butwarra ameen, in proceeding to measure certain lands in the course of proceedings connected with the partition of an estate under Bengal Act VIII of 1876, was obstructed by certain persons who claimed the lands and objected to their being measured. The lands were stated in the report of the ameen to be the common land of estate No. 546 and of certain other estates. The persons who obstructed him were not co-sharers in that estate, and contended that the land sought to be measured had been divided amongst the maliks of the different estates, and different portions of it had been held separately by them. The persons so obstructing the ameen were charged with an offence under s. 186 of the Penal Code, the Deputy Collector in charge of the butwarra proceedings being of opinion that s. 112 of the Act applied, and that the ameen was entitled to measure the land. The accused were convicted. Held that s. 112 is limited to cases where the community of interest in the land in dispute between the proprietors of the estate under partition as a body and the proprietors of other estates is admitted. When this is not admitted, the provisions of s. 116 apply. Held further that, as there was no evidence to show that such community of interest was admitted, the accused were entitled to the benefit of the doubt and to have the case treated as one under s. 116, and that, as the procedure laid down in that section had not been followed, the ameen had no power to measure the lands, and could not be said to be a public servant acting in discharge of his public functions, and that the conviction must consequently be set aside. LILLA SINGH v. of warrant to peon—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 251—Court-fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 22—Service of warrant of attachment.—The petitioner was convicted under s. 186 of the Penal Code of obstructing a Civil Court peon, who was attaching his property in execution of a decree; the warrant of attachment was addressed to the Nazir of the Court, who delegated its execution to a peon by an endorsement of the peon's name. Held the Nazir had authority thus to delegate the execution of the warrant to the peon. The words "to be executed" in s. 251 of the Code of Civil Procedure would seem to imply that it was not intended that the "proper officer" should himself execute all warrants sent to him. And there is nothing in the Code which indicates in any way that warrants being either warrants of arrest or of attachment, or for distress and sale, are to be executed by the "proper officer," in any manner different from the service of summonses. The Court-fees Act (VII of 1870) distinctly contemplates that the peons are to be employed, not only for the service of summonses, notices, or orders, but also for the execution of other processes, such as warrants of arrest, or of attachment and distress. Though the authority may well be conferred in more clear and explicit terms than are expressed by a mere endorsement by the Nazir of the peon's name, still it is impossible to say that that is not sufficient evidence of the delegation. DHARAM CHAND LAL v. The owner, who was a potter and cultivator by occupation, was in the village at the time. He did not pay the tax. A warrant of distress was issued, the house-register not having been completely filled up, and a bucket and spade belonging to the defaulter were attached. The defaulter successfully resisted the distraint. Held that the provisions of the Act had been sufficiently complied with as regards the preliminary steps for making the demand and the service of notice, and the fact that the spade and the bucket were protected from attachment under s. 94 did not justify the resistance, and accordingly that the defaulter was guilty of offences under Penal Code, ss. 186 and 188. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. No summons or warrant had been applied for, nor any complaint lodged before the Magistrate previous to the arrest of the prisoners. No charge in writing was framed as required under ss. 250, 251 of the Criminal Procedure Code. No evidence was taken; but the prisoners admitted carrying the firearms. The Magistrate convicted them, under s. 188 of the Penal Code, of disobedience of an order duly promulgated by a public servant. There was no evidence that the disobedience would cause, or tend to cause, annoyance, obstruction, or injury to human life, health, or safety. Held the convictions must be quashed. Previously to November 1885, B sold an 8-anna share of his interest in the disputed land to C, who at the time of his purchase had notice of the order of the 21st of May 1883. In November 1885 B and others went to the disputed lands, and attempted to turn A out of possession by force, and to compel the tenants of the lands to pay rent and give kabuliats to B and C. At the time that B and his companions went to the disputed land, the latter were aware of the order of the 21st of May 1883, though none of them was a party to the enquiry then made by the District Magistrate. of order and subsequent disobedience.—The terms of s. 134 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the notification made by Government thereunder as to promulgation and issue of an order, are directory, but an omission to follow strictly such direction, though it is an irregularity, does not invalidate the order: where therefore it is shown that the order has been brought to the actual knowledge of the person sought to be affected by it, such omission does not prevent the case coming within s. 138 of the Penal Code. *IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF PARBUTTY CHARAN AICH. The Magistrate then adopted the procedure prescribed by ss. 136, 140, and made an order requiring N to fence the well by a certain date. N, who was personally served with notice of the above order, did not comply with it. The Magistrate then sanctioned the prosecution of N under s. 138 of the Penal Code. N appeared and produced evidence to prove that he was not liable to fence the well. Held that the accused was guilty of the offence of disobedience to an order duly promulgated by a public servant, and was not entitled to go behind the order and show that it was one which ought not to have been made. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. A conviction under s. 188, Penal Code, for the disobedience of an order under s. 144, Criminal Procedure Code, in the absence of evidence as to the likely result of the disobedience of such order is bad in law. Although the establishment of a rival hat at a place near to an old hat and held on the same day may lead to a breach of the peace, it would not be safe or proper that that should alone form a sufficient ground for a conviction under s. 188 of the Penal Code. *BROJONATH GHOSH v. The Magistrate, however, considered that the offence was clearly proved, and convicted the prisoner. The Sessions Judge on appeal affirmed the conviction, observing that it was immaterial what the words used were, and that the intention and effect of the words were plain. Held that the Judge was mistaken in regarding it as immaterial what the words used actually were, and that, on the contrary, it was most material that those words should be before the Court to enable it to ascertain whether in fact a threat of injury to the public servant was really made by the accused. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 5. — Causing disappearance of evidence of offence.—K and B, having caused the death of J in a field belonging to B, removed J's dead body from that field to his own field with the intention of screening themselves from punishment. K was convicted on these facts of an offence under s. 201 of the Penal Code. Held that that section referred to persons other than the actual offenders, and K could not therefore properly be punished under that section for what he had done to screen himself from punishment. Also that, as a matter of fact, he did not, by removing J's corpse from one field to another, cause any evidence of J's murder, which that corpse afforded, to disappear, and his act, although his object may have been to divert suspicion from himself and B, did not constitute the offence defined in that section. *EMPRESS OF INDIA v. 6. — False information—Exculpatory statements inculcating another.—A woman who, with her infant child, eloped from her husband's house, was afterwards arrested on a charge of murdering the child which was missing. She made three different statements: (1) that she had left it with her husband; (2) that she had been enticed away by one B, who had taken the child from her; (3) that one H had drowned the child. The Sessions Judge believed the last statement, and convicted her under s. 201 of the Penal Code. Held that the conviction was wrong, and must be set aside. S. 201 of the Penal Code does not apply to a case where the person, who is the probable or possible offender, makes statements exculpating himself by inculcating another. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF BEHALA BIBI. *EMPRESS v. 7. — Concealing evidence of crime—Secondary offence, Conviction of.—In a trial upon a charge under s. 201 of the Penal Code, the accused made a statement to the effect that he was present at the commission of a murder by two other persons; that he himself took no part in the act; that before the murder was committed, one of the persons named pulled off a rasi from the bed on which the deceased was sleeping; and that, in his presence, the rasi was subsequently concealed in a stack. It was proved that the rasi belonged to the deceased, that it was found concealed in a stack, and that it was pointed out by the accused to the police. The accused was convicted of concealing evidence of the murder, with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment, under s. 201 of the Penal Code. Held that the conviction must be quashed, inasmuch as, if the rasi had not been concealed or destroyed, its presence or existence would have been no evidence of the murder. A person who is concerned as a principal in the commission of a crime cannot be convicted of the secondary offence of concealing evidence of the crime. QUEEN-EMRESS v. LALLU [I. L. R., 7 All., 749]

8. — Disappearance of evidence—Intention to screen offender.—A person cannot be punished under s. 201 of the Penal Code, where the act which caused the disappearance of the evidence of the commission of an offence was not done with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment. It is not sufficient that the disappearance of evidence was likely to have the effect of screening the offender. QUEEN v. TOOLSHEE RAI [5 N. W., 186]

9. — Giving false information of offence.—Prisoner was charged, under s. 201 of the Penal Code, "for that he, knowing or having reason to believe that an offence punishable with death had been committed, with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment, gave information respecting the offence which he knew or believed to be false." Held that the proper order of proof on the part of the prosecution in the case was to prove (1) that A N was murdered; (2) that the prisoner gave information respecting the offence; (3) that such information was false and known by him to be so; (4) that he then knew of the commission of the murder; and (5) that his intention was to screen the murderer. Held also that it was essential to the completeness of the case for the prosecution to show, not only that the information was given, but also that it was false, and known to be so by the prisoner. Further enquiry directed under s. 422, Criminal Procedure Code, 1861. QUEEN v. SUBBIA-MANYA PILLAI . . . 3 Mad., 251

10. — Causing disappearance of evidence of crime—Proof of commission of crime.—A conviction on a charge of causing the disappearance of evidence of an offence which amounted to culpable homicide not amounting to murder may be good, though there be no proof of who committed the culpable homicide. QUEEN v. MUDDUN MOHUN BOSE [7 W. R., Cr., 22]

11. — Causing disappearance of evidence of an offence.—Held that it is necessary, in order to justify a conviction under s. 201 of the Penal Code, that an offence for which some person has been convicted, or is criminally responsible, should have been committed. EMPRESS OF INDIA v. ABDUL KADIR . . . I. L. R., 3 All., 279

12. — Causing disappearance of evidence of an offence—Omitting to report a sudden, unnatural, or suspicious death.—Before an accused can be convicted of an offence under s. 201 of the Penal Code, it must be proved that an offence, the evidence of which he is charged with causing to disappear, has actually been committed, and also that the accused knew or had information sufficient to lead him to believe that the offence had been committed.

13. ——— Abetment of murder—Causing disappearance of evidence of offence.—Prisoner was present at a murder without being aware that such an act was to be committed. Through fear he not only did not interfere to prevent the commission of the crime, but joined the murderers in concealing the body. Held that he was guilty, not of abetment of murder, but of causing the disappearance of evidence of a crime under s. 201 of the Penal Code. *QUEEN v. [6 W. R., Cr., 80]

14. ——— Causing disappearance of evidence.—The accused was attacked by a man whom he found by a hole cut in his house for the purpose of committing a burglary, and struck out at the man a blow which caused his death. Held that the accused simply exercised his right of private defence, and was guilty of no offence. Two other men, who helped him to remove the dead body, and were accused of causing the disappearance of evidence, knowing that an offence had been committed, under s. 201, Penal Code, were also acquitted, for that section contemplates a belief that an offence has been committed; and as the first prisoner was acquitted of all offence, it may be presumed that the other prisoners did not believe that any offence had been committed. QUEEN v. PELKOO NUSRYO
[2 W. R., Cr., 42]

15. ——— Causing disappearance of evidence of supposed murder—Want of proof of commission of offence.—S. 201 of the Penal Code applies merely to the person who screens the principal or actual offender, and not the principal or actual offender himself. The accused were charged with murder and also with causing the disappearance of the corpse of the deceased with the intention of screening the murderer from punishment under s. 201 of the Penal Code. Evidence for the prosecution pointed conclusively to one or other of them being the actual murderer; but it was impossible upon the evidence to say which of them caused the death. 2. ——— and s. 209—Fraudulently applying for execution of decree.—Where a person applies for the execution of a decree which has already been executed, his offence falls not under s. 209, but s. 210 of the Penal Code. S. 209 relates to false and fraudulent claims in a Court of Justice, and is confined to the Civil Court in which the original suit was brought. QUEEN v. BEGUN MAHTOON

3. ——— Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 258—Satisfaction of decree—Execution of decree—Fraudulently executing decree after it has been satisfied when satisfaction has not been certified to Court.—A decree-holder having proceeded to execute his decree against his judgment-debtor, the latter objected, stating that the decree had been already satisfied, although the adjustment thereof had not been certified to the Court as required by s. 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The judgment-debtor, being under the circumstances compelled to deposit the amount of the decree in Court, applied for and obtained sanction to prosecute the decree-holder for an offence under s. 210

of the Penal Code. It was contended that the case did not fall within that section, as the satisfaction, not having been certified to the Court, could not be recognized by the Court executing the decree, and that consequently no offence had been committed. Held that the words "after it has been satisfied," used in s. 210 of the Penal Code, indicate only the fact of the satisfaction of the decree. The fact that the satisfaction is of such a nature that the Court executing the decree could not recognize it, does not prevent the decree-holder from being properly convicted of an offence under that section. MADHUB CHUNDER MOZUMDAR v. 4. ————— Sanction to prosecution—Code of Criminal Procedure (1852), s. 195—Execution of decree which has been satisfied.—A decree-holder applied for execution of his decree against the judgment-debtor. The application was dismissed on the ground that the decree had been satisfied out of Court. The judgment-debtor then applied for and obtained sanction to prosecute the decree-holder under s. 210 of the Penal Code. Held that such sanction must be revoked, because the decree had not been caused to be executed, and therefore no offence under s. 210 of the Penal Code had been committed. SHAMA CHARAN DAS v. The warrant was sent to a certain thana to be executed. It was there, after being copied into a book kept for that purpose at the thana, made over to a particular constable for execution. When the constable to whom the warrant had been made over had left the thana, it was discovered that D was in a village other than that in which he had been supposed to be. Thereupon the officer temporarily in charge of the thana made a copy from the book at the thana, endorsed on the back the names of one N and some other constables, and having signed the endorsement, sent N and the others out with this paper to arrest D. N and his companions arrested D; but, as they were returning with him in custody, some of D's friends, aided by D himself, attacked them, rescued D, and caused hurt to the police. Held that the police officers concerned in arresting D under the circumstances above described were not acting in the lawful discharge of their duty within the meaning of s. 332 of the Penal Code, so as to render the accused liable to conviction under that section; but, inasmuch as they were acting in good faith under the colour of their office, s. 99 of the Penal Code applied, and D and his associates might be properly convicted under ss. 147 and 323 of the Code. The evidence showed that the children were disposed of and registered as dancing girls of a pagoda for the purpose of being brought up as dancing girls. Held that offences under ss. 373 and 378 of the Penal Code had been committed, and that the prisoners were properly convicted. EX-PARTE PADMAVATI

4. ————— Illegal disposal of a minor—Dedication of dancing-girl to temple.—A dancing-woman of a temple applied to the manager of the temple for the appointment of a minor girl, whom she falsely described as her daughter, to her kothu miras; the manager ordered that the girl be placed on the pay abstract like other dancing-girls, and she was employed about the temple, though the ceremony of tying the bottu (after which the girl could not be married) did not take place. Held that the above facts constituted prima facie evidence that an offence under Penal Code, s. 372, had been committed by the dancing-woman, the manager abovenamed, and the parents of the girl. SREENIVASA v. ANNASAMI

[I. L. R., 15 Mad., 41]

5. ————— Disposal of a minor—Dedication of a girl in a temple.—The accused dedicated his minor daughter as a Basivi by a form of marriage with an idol. It appeared that a Basivi is incapable of contracting a lawful marriage, and ordinarily practises promiscuous intercourse with men, and that her sons succeed to her father's property. Held the accused had committed an offence under Penal Code, s. 372. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. BASAVA

[I. L. R., 15 Mad., 75]

6. ————— Illegal disposal of a minor—Dedication of girl to temple as dancing-girl—Revision.—A dancing-woman (fourth accused) of a temple applied to the manager (first accused) of the temple for the appointment of a girl under the age of sixteen, whom she had adopted as her daughter, to her kothu miras office, to which duties more or less connected with the preparation of provisions of the temple were attached. The manager, before whom the girl had sung and danced, ordered that she be placed on the pay abstract like other dancing-girls, and she was employed in the abovementioned duties about the temple for about five months. It appeared that the dancing-women of the temple lived partly at least by prostitution, and there was evidence that the girl sang and danced in the temple, received wages and wore a bottu (an emblem of marriage). The Magistrate upon these facts refused to frame a charge against the manager of the temple and the adoptive mother of the minor under the Penal Code, s. 372. Held per COLLINS, C.J. (PARKER, J., dissenting), that the Magistrate should have framed a charge. On a petition under the Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 435, 439, preferred by the complainant, who was a dismissed servant of the temple, after the prosecution had been pending for two years, it appeared that the girl had suffered no harm. Held that, whether or not the Magistrate should have framed a charge, the High Court was not bound to send the case for re-trial. SREENIVASA v. ANNASAMI

7. ————— Minor, Illegal disposal of—Dedication of a minor to the service of a temple with the knowledge that she was likely to be used for immoral purposes—Dancing-girls.—The accused dedicated his minor daughter, five or six years of age, to the service of a temple as a dancing-girl. The evidence showed that dancing-girls attached to a temple, as a rule, led immoral lives. Held that these facts were sufficient to constitute an offence under s. 372 of the Penal Code. QUEEN-EMPERESS v. TIPPA

8. ————— and s. 373—Obtaining possession of minor for purpose of prostitution.—The prisoner was tried upon a charge of having obtained possession of Dowlat Bee, a minor aged ten years, with intent that she should be used for an unlawful and immoral purpose,—that is to say, for the purpose of illicit intercourse,—and having thereby committed an offence under s. 373 of the Penal Code. The evidence showed that the prisoner met Dowlat Bee, a girl eleven years old, in a street at Triplicane, and promised to give her a pice if she would accompany him into an uninhabited house close by and allow him to have sexual intercourse with her. The girl went willingly with the prisoner, and both were detected in the act of having sexual intercourse. The girl had gone out without permission, had not attained the age of puberty, and the evidence tended to show that the girl had not before had sexual connexion. The jury convicted the prisoner. Held by the High Court that the case proved against the prisoner did not make out the offence charged. QUEEN v. SHAIK ALI

9. ————— Letting to hire a girl under sixteen for immoral purpose for one occasion—Prostitution for a course of life—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 373.—A young prostitute under sixteen years of age was brought to a house of assignation by the accused at the request of the complainant and for his supposed use on that one occasion, it not being contemplated that the girl should be sold or let out for a period of employment, or for the purpose of being employed by the complainant as a prostitute, or for the purpose of being disposed of by him for that course of life. Held that such a letting out by the accused was not within the meaning of s. 372 of the Penal Code, which on the authorities contemplates a case of letting or hiring or other similar transaction by which the possession of a girl is obtained with the intention of employing her habitually for the purpose of indiscriminate sexual intercourse. Dowlat Bee v. there met J, a public woman, with whom they went to reside, and who introduced visitors to S, and received the money paid by them in exchange for the board and food supplied to S and N. N was convicted, under s. 372, Penal Code, of disposing of a minor for the purpose of prostitution, and J was convicted, under s. 373, Penal Code, of obtaining possession of a minor for the purpose of prostitution. Held per JACKSON, J., that on the facts proved no offence was committed under the Penal Code. Per GLOVER, J.—N and J were both guilty under ss. 372 and 373 respectively, and their appeals should be dismissed. QUEEN v. 11. ——— Buying or selling minor for the purpose of prostitution, etc.—Certain persons, falsely representing that a minor girl of a low caste was a member of a higher caste, induced a member of such higher caste to take her in marriage and to pay money for her in the full belief that such representation was true. Held per STUART, C.J., that such persons could not be convicted on these facts of offences under ss. 372 and 373 of the Penal Code. Per OLDFIELD, J., and STRAIGHT, J., that if such girl was disposed of for the purpose of marriage, it could not be said, because the marriage might be invalid under Hindu law, that such persons acted with the intention that she should be employed or used for the purposes of prostitution or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or that they knew it to be likely that she would be employed or used for such purpose, and consequently they could not be convicted of an offence under those sections. Per PEARSON, J., and SPANKIE, J., that such girl having been disposed of for the purpose of marriage, although the marriage might be objectionable under Hindu law, it did not appear that it was wholly invalid, and therefore such intent or knowledge could not certainly be presumed, and such persons could not be convicted of offences under those sections. EMPEROR OF INDIA v. 12. ——— and s. 373 — Obtaining a minor for prostitution—Dancing-girl caste—Adoption.—A woman, being a member of the dancing-girl caste, obtained possession of a minor girl and employed her for the purpose of prostitution; she subsequently obtained in adoption another minor girl from her parents, who belonged to the same caste. She and the parents of the second girl were charged together under ss. 372, 373 of the Penal Code. The charges related to both girls. Held that ss. 372, 373 of the Penal Code may be applicable in a case where the minor concerned is a member of the dancing-girl caste. Per MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J.—It would be no offence if the intention was that the girl should be brought up as a daughter, and that, when she attains her age, she should be allowed to select either to marry or follow the profession of her prostitute mother. QUEEN-EMPEROR v. sixteen years was taken by accused No. 1, under the direction of accused No. 2, from Sholapur to Tuljapur (in the Nizam's territory), and there dedicated to the goddess Amba, with intent or knowing it to be likely that the minor would be used for purposes of prostitution. The District Magistrate of Sholapur convicted accused No. 1 of an offence under s. 372 and accused No. 2 of abetment of the offence under ss. 372 and 108A of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced them each to six months' rigorous imprisonment. Held that there was no offence committed in British India, and therefore the accused No. 2 was not guilty of abetment, and s. 108A of the Penal Code had no application to the present case. Mere intention not followed by any act cannot constitute any offence, and an indirect preparation which does not amount to an act which amounts to a commencement of the offence does not constitute either a principal offence or an attempt or abetment of the same. The intention of either of the accused while they were staying at Sholapur did not constitute any offence, and their removal with the girl to Tuljapur did not by itself constitute an abetment. QUEEN-EMPEROR v. 2. ——— Obtaining possession of minor for purposes of prostitution—Offence defined by above section explained.—To constitute the offence provided for by s. 373 of the Penal Code, it is necessary, first, that a minor under sixteen years of age shall be bought, hired, or otherwise obtained possession of, and, secondly, that the minor shall be bought, hired, or otherwise obtained possession of, with the intent that the same minor, while still under the age of sixteen years, will be employed for the purposes of prostitution, or with the knowledge that it is likely that the said minor, while still under the age of sixteen years, will be employed or used for an unlawful and immoral purpose. The offence is complete so soon as the obtaining possession, with the requisite intention or knowledge, of the minor is accomplished, though the minor may not enter upon prostitution until years after she has attained maturity, or may never enter upon such a profession at all. *Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. PENAL CODE (ACT XLV OF 1860)
—continued.

Onus of proving guilty intention in case of sale of minor for purpose of prostitution—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 106.—In order to constitute an offence under s. 373 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary that the intention or knowledge of likelihood as to the employment of the minor for purposes of prostitution should be with reference to employment either immediate or at some definite and not very remote future period; but an offence under the section is complete as soon as a girl is purchased with the guilty intention or knowledge of likelihood that she will, while still a minor under the age of sixteen years, be employed for that purpose, although the point of time for such employment may be remote by reason of her physical incapacity for the purpose. H, the father of two girls, twins about a year old, sold one of them to K, a prostitute, for Rs. 9, and within ten days of such sale also sold her the other for Rs. 14. K was shown to have previously purchased another child whom she had brought up from her infancy, and who was then living with her and leading the life of a prostitute. Both H and K made confessions as to the guilty knowledge and intention with which the sale of the two children was made. K's confession was made within two hours after her arrest, and immediately thereafter she was committed to hajat for seven days. On the seventh day, on being brought up for trial before the Deputy Magistrate, she retracted her confession and assigned an innocent reason for her purchase of the girl. H and K were tried jointly, H being charged with an offence under s. 372, viz., selling the girls for the purpose of prostitution, and K with an offence under s. 373, viz., buying for the same purpose. Neither was charged with abetting the other. The two confessions were used as evidence, and there was other evidence tending to prove the intention and guilty knowledge. The Deputy Magistrate convicted each of the offence with which they were charged. On appeal the Sessions Judge acquitted K on the ground that the offence under s. 373 could not be committed unless the intention was that the minor was to be used for the purpose of prostitution at some definite future time, and that it would be carrying the law too far to hold that the intention had reference to a period some twelve or fourteen years after the purchase when the minor became capable of being used for that purpose. Held, for the reasons above stated, that the acquittal on that ground was erroneous. Held, further, that having regard to the circumstances under which the confession of K was given and retracted, it was open to suspicion, and could not safely be acted upon, and that the confession made by H was not legally admissible against her, as they were not being tried jointly for the same offence. Held also that, having regard to the provisions of s. 106-III (a) of the Evidence Act, and to the fact that there was evidence apart from the confessions, which tended to show the knowledge and intention which the character and circumstances of the act suggested, the onus lay on K to show that the intention was other than that which the act suggested, or that the employment of the girls as prostitutes was not intended till after they had attained the age of sixteen years, and that, as she had failed to show this, and the evidence all tended the other way, the acquittal was erroneous, and must be reversed. DEPUTY LEGAL REMEMBRANCER v. KARUNA BAISTORI. I. L. R., 22 Calc., 164

4. ——— Obtaining a girl under the age of 16 for purposes of prostitution—Evidence of intent.—In a charge against a dancing-girl under s. 373 of the Indian Penal Code for having purchased a young girl with intent that she would be used for the purpose of prostitution or knowing it to be likely that she would be so used, evidence was given of the fact of purchase for a consideration, and that numerous other dancing-girls residing in the neighbourhood were in the habit of obtaining girls and bringing them up as dancing girls or prostitutes, and that there were no instances of girls brought up by dancing-girls ever having been married. On its being contended that there was no evidence of intent to support a conviction under s. 373 of the Indian Penal Code, — Held that there was evidence before the Court to support the conviction. *QUEEN-EMPERESS v. 1. s. 475.—Possession of papers bearing counterfeit marks or devices—Charge under s. 475, how to be framed—Misdirection—Evidence.—During the course of a police investigation into a complaint of theft, the house of the accused was searched and a bundle of papers, about 58 in number, were found, which were alleged to be forgeries or preparations for forgeries. The accused was thereupon committed to the Court of Session on a charge under s. 475 of the Penal Code. A few days before the trial of the accused, the police searched the house of one S, who was a witness for the defence, and there discovered a batch of suspicious papers which were produced at the trial, and put in as evidence against the accused. The accused was convicted of the offence under s. 475 of the Penal Code and sentenced to transportation for life. Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that the suspicious papers found in S's house were not admissible in evidence against the accused. Held, further, that the Judge's direction to the jury regarding those papers, that they established a connection between the accused and many of the witnesses belonging to the same faction, and that they showed the extent to which the practice of forgery had gone in the village, and that in this way they were relevant to the question of guilty knowledge and intention, was a misdirection which prejudiced the accused. In the trial of an accused person on a charge under s. 475 of the Penal Code, the charge should be so framed as to specify distinctly that part of the section which is applicable to the case, and should distinctly specify the particular papers bearing a counterfeit mark or device which the accused was alleged to have had in his possession with the intent mentioned in the section. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 2. s. 467.—Counterfeiting device or mark.—In order to a conviction under s. 475 of the Penal Code, the document which the accused has in his possession must have some counterfeit device or mark upon it, and it must be proved that the accused has the document in his possession with the intent of using such device or mark for the purpose of giving the appearance of authenticity to the document. The document must be of the nature mentioned in s. 467 of the Penal Code. QUEEN v. RUGHOONUNDUN PUTTROUVERES

—continued.

1. ————— Enticing or taking away wife temporarily living alone.—Enticing or taking away, with a criminal intent, a wife living in her husband's house, or in a house hired by him for her occupation and at his expense, during his temporary absence, is punishable under s. 498 of the Penal Code, provided the seducer knew, or had reason to know, that she was the wife of the man from whose house he took her. MUTTY KHAN v. MUNGLUO
[5 W. R., Cr., 50]

2. ————— Enticing away married woman—Presumption of marriage—Onus probandi.—In a charge under s. 498 of the Penal Code, the proof that the woman and a man other than the accused were living together is sufficient to throw the burthen of proof on the accused that they were not man and wife. QUEEN v. WAZIRA

3. ————— Enticing away wife—Proof of marriage.—S and G having been convicted of enticing away the wife of the complainant, the conviction was quashed on appeal, on the ground that strict proof of marriage being necessary for a conviction under s. 498 of the Penal Code, the evidence adduced (viz., of the complainant, the woman and her mother, who swore to the fact of the marriage) was not sufficient to enable the Court to form an opinion whether the marriage took place as a fact, and if it did take place, whether it was according to law. The accused did not cross-examine the witnesses as to the fact or validity of the marriage or otherwise impugn it. Held that the marriage was sufficiently proved. Empress v. Pitambar Singh, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 566, discussed. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SUBBARAYAN . . . I. L. R., 9 Mad., 9

4. ————— Alyasantana law—Marriage—Custom.—In the absence of very clear evidence of custom, which, if well founded, must be a matter of general notoriety, the cohabitation of a man and a woman under the Alyasantana system cannot be considered marriage so as to render punishable, under s. 498 of the Penal Code, a person who entices away the woman with the intents specified in that section. KORAGA v. QUEEN
[I. L. R., 8 Mad., 374]

5. ————— Detaining enticed woman.—A conviction cannot be had under the latter part of s. 498 of the Penal Code for detaining an enticed woman, until the enticing has been proved. EXPRESS v. TIKA SINGH . . . I. L. R., 3 All., 251

6. ————— Enticing and taking away.—Upon an indictment under s. 498 of the Penal Code, charging that the prisoner took away one A, who was then, and whom he then knew to be, the wife of one M, with the intent that he might have illicit intercourse with the said A, —Held that there was a taking within the meaning of the section, although the advances and solicitation had proceeded from the woman, and the prisoner had for some time refused to yield to her request. QUEEN v. KUMARASAMI . . . 2 Mad., 381

—continued.

7. ————— Concealing or detaining.—In a charge under s. 498 of the Penal Code, the words of the section, "conceals or detains," must be taken to extend to the enticing or inducing a wife to withhold or conceal herself from her husband, and assisting her to do so, as well as to physical restraint or prevention of her will or action. Depriving the husband of proper control over his wife for the purpose of illicit intercourse is the gist of the offence, and a detention occasioning such deprivation may be brought about simply by the influence of allurements and blandishments. QUEEN v. SUNDARA DASS TEVAN . . . 4 Mad., 20

8. ————— Enticing away married woman—Finding in words of section.—A finding exactly in the words of s. 498 of the Penal Code, that the prisoner took or enticed away a married woman from her husband, or some person having the care of her on his behalf, with intent that she should have illicit intercourse with some person, or concealed or detained such woman with a like intent, though not actually illegal when it is doubtful which of the several offences has been committed, is a finding which ought not to be resorted to if it can be avoided and it can be determined under which part of the section the prisoner is guilty. QUEEN v. MOTHORA NATH ROY . . . 22 W. R., Cr., 72.

9. ————— Detaining with criminal intent married woman.—The words "such woman" in s. 498 of the Penal Code do not mean such a woman as has been so enticed as mentioned in that section, but mean such woman whom the accused knows or has reason to believe to be the wife of any other man; the detention of such a woman with the particular intent defined in the section is one of the offences made punishable under that section. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NIADAB
[I. L. R., 10 All., 580.]

10. ————— Enticing away a married woman—Evidence of marriage—Mere statement of the complainant and the woman.—Where a charge is made under s. 498 of the Penal Code of enticing away a married woman, the Court should require some better evidence of the marriage than the mere statement of the complainant and the woman. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. of the public does not constitute an offence under s. 506, but it is necessary that the fear or alarm should be caused in such circumstances as to render it likely that a person may be induced to commit an offence against the State or against the public tranquillity. Account cannot be taken in a case of this kind of a vague possibility that the state of mind which is caused by alarm may easily induce a person to commit an offence against the public tranquillity. This would depend on the circumstances of a particular case. The accused, a daffadar of a tea estate in Darjeeling, who had recently returned from Nepal, circulated a report among the garden coolies that a war was impending between the British Government and Nepal, that Nepalese soldiers were stationed on the frontier, and that the coolies would be killed by the British. The effect of the report was that about 150 coolies immediately ran away. Held that the accused could not be taken to have intended more than the probable result of the report he circulated, the result which, in fact, did take place.

PENSIONS ACT (VI OF 1849).

1. ——— Arrears of pension, Succession to—Heirs—Succeeding grantees.—Arrears of pension due to the deceased at the time of her death form part of her estate, and the person who is legal heir to the deceased is entitled to recover them. The grantee of the pension formerly enjoyed by the deceased has no right to such arrears which formed part of the deceased's estate. NOUSHARAH SOOLTAN BEGUM v. NURRAH SOOLTAN BEGUM

2. ——— Agreement to pay portion of pension.—A pension having been granted by Government to B P in lieu of a saranjam held by his grandfather, a claim to share the same by M P and his brothers was compromised by B P, agreeing to pay them a certain proportion thereof yearly. The Agent for Sardars, affirming the decree of the Assistant Agent, found the agreement to be null and void as an assignment of a future interest in a pension. Held that, as the pension was not granted "in consideration of past service and present infirmities or old age," the case did not come within the terms of Act VI of 1849, and that the agreement was a valid one. *MADHAVRAY PANSE v. 4. ————— Political pension.—An order made by a District Judge, rejecting an application to attach a pension, on the ground that being a political pension it could not be attached under Act VI of 1849, was reversed on petition by the High Court, which directed the pension to be attached. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF HARBEAT BIN RAM CHANDRABHAT

5. ————— Requisite proof for exemption from attachment.—On a petition praying that an attachment placed on a pension, of which petitioner was the recipient, might be removed under Act VI of 1849, the High Court declined to interfere, as it had not been shown that the pension was one enjoyed in consideration of past services and present infirmities or old age. EX-PARTE VITHEAL-

2. ————— Construction of Act—Grant by Government—Ownership in the soil.—Though as stated in Krishnarav v. Rangrav, 4 Bom., A. C., 1, "sanadi grants in inam, saranjam, etc., are, generally speaking, more properly described as alienations of the royal share in the produce of the land (i.e., of land revenue) than grants of land, although in popular parlance occasionally so called," yet such is not invariably the case. If words are employed in a grant which, expressly or by necessary implication, indicate that Government intends that, so far as it may have any ownership in the soil, that ownership shall pass to the grantee, neither Government, nor any person subsequently to the date of the grant deriving under Government, can be permitted to say that the ownership did not so pass, unless there are in the grant such detailed provisions as show that such words are limited in their operation. An enactment of a character so arbitrary as Act XXIII of 1871 ought to be construed strictly, and the Courts should not extend its operation further than the language of the legislature requires. RAJVI NARAYAN MANDLIK v. 4. ————— Political pension in lieu of grant of land resumed—Impartible property.—A saranjam is ordinarily impartible, and semble that a political pension granted in substitution of a resumed saranjam is so likewise. The Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871) prevents a Civil Court from declaring such a pension to be partible, unless the Collector should authorize it to do so; and the fact that the Collector authorizes a suit for maintenance out of such a pension affords no ground for presuming that he authorizes a suit for the partition of the pension. RAMCHANDRA SAKHARAM v. Where a mortgagee of such haks had, before the date on which the Act came into operation, obtained a decree for the recovery of his mortgage-debt from the mortgaged haks and from the mortgagor personally, and a fresh suit was necessary to enforce execution of that decree against these haks,—Held that the Act did not apply to such fresh suit. Semble—That the word "right" in s. 3 of Act XXIII of 1871 is equivalent to the word "hak" in its restricted sense of "allowance" or "fee." PARBHUDAS RAYAJI v. 2. ————— Toda garas hak, Suit for money in lieu of.—In part of Western India annual payments, known as toda garas hak, made by village communities and commuted by them into liabilities to garasias, have been recognized as a species of property, however unlawful their origin. In 1862 a resolution of the Government of Bombay described the position of the garasias at that time, and gave them the option of resuming the collection of the toda garas hak formerly levied, resorting only to legal proceedings to enforce their claims, or of receiving from the Government allowances of an equivalent amount, the collections in the latter case being discontinued on all hands. The ancestors of the adoptive father of the plaintiff formerly levied toda garas hak; and after 1862 the Government in respect thereof made payments, under the resolution, to three brothers, of whom one was the plaintiff's father; the latter receiving a one-third share, which on his death in 1865 was no longer paid. Held that a suit against the Government for payment of this third share with arrears fell under the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4, which prohibits cognizance, save as in the Act provided, "of any suit relating to any pension or grant of money or land revenue conferred or made by the British or any former Government, whatever may have been the consideration for such pension or grant, or whatever may have been the nature of the payment, claim, or right for which such pension or grant may have been substituted." Held that there was no reason, either in the language of the Act itself or in any antecedent legislation, for construing these words as applicable only to rights in the nature of pensions. MAHARAJA MOHANSINGHI JEYSINGHI v. 6. ————— Grant of land revenue—Former suit for money.—The plaintiffs formerly sued for a sum of money, and, obtaining a decree, attached in 1861 two villages the land revenue of which had been granted in inam. The attachment continued down to 1875, when the last holder of the villages died, and the Government having resumed the villages, the attachment was raised. The plaintiffs now sued to have their right declared to satisfy their decree from the revenues of the villages. Held that the former suit was not a suit in respect of a pension or grant of money of land revenue, and that an attachment placed in pursuance of an ordinary money-decree before the date of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871) could not be treated as a suit in respect of a pension, grant of money, or land revenue instituted before such date, so as to exclude the operation of the Act under s. 1. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL v. 8. ————— Gratuitous pension—Suit for share of annual grant made by Government.—One S, a servant of the Delhi Emperor, having been killed in Burdwan while fighting for his master, the Emperor built a tomb over his remains, and made a grant of land (five mouzahs) to his family for the purpose of maintaining it in the manner usual amongst Mahomedans. This grant was subsequently confirmed to a descendant of S and his heirs. Some years later the land came into the possession of the Raja of Burdwan, who paid to the grantees a certain sum of money annually. When the perpetual settlement was made, the British Government continued the payment on account of the Raja, in whose zamindari four of the five mouzahs were incorporated. Owing to disputes in the family, a reference was made to Government, who reduced the money payment and appointed a mutwalli for the tomb. One of the descendants of S then sued the Government and the mutwalli for a share of this annual payment. Held that the grant to S's family was not a gratuitous pension or allowance, and that the money payment by the zamindar of Burdwan was rent justly due to them for the use and occupation of their land, and that the fact of the payment being continued by Government did not alter its nature.

paid from the Government treasury, called mokasa amals. A and his successors continued in possession down to 1852, when the inam was attached on behalf of Government pending an inquiry, under Bombay Act XI of 1852, into the title of the holder of the inam. The attachment remained in force till 1865, when Government finally decided that the inam property, with the exception of a certain portion, should be restored to those from whose possession it had been taken in 1852. Thereupon D, the successor in interest of A, applied to the Collector to be restored to possession. The Collector refused. D therefore sued him for arrears of the mokasa amals, and obtained a decree in 1868. Thereafter D did not receive any payment from the Government treasury. In 1868 D filed the present suit against Government to recover possession of the inam lands together with arrears of the amals. Held that the suit against Government was not cognizable by the Civil Courts both under the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4, and under the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876), s. 4. Both these Acts, though not retrospective in their operation, still do not create rights to relief against the Government where none subsisted before. Accordingly, the suit, being barred under Bombay Regulation XXIX of 1827, was equally barred under the later Acts XXIII of 1871 and X of 1876. SIVRAM DINAKAR GHARPURAY v. 15. — Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Abkari revenue—Inamdar, Right of, to abkari revenue under grant from Peshwa.—The Peshwa's Government granted in inam to the plaintiff's ancestor, by sanad, the villages of Golap and Randpar. The sanad granted "water, trees, grass, wood, quarries, mines, buried treasure, present and future cesses and taxes and assessments." The plaintiff brought the present suit to recover from the defendant a part of the abkari revenue for 1884-85 and 1885-86. He contended that the revenue derived by the Government for tapping trees in the villages aforesaid was a tax within the contemplation of the grant. Held that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit under the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871). The tax in question was a money tax, and as soon as it was imposed, the grant, if it entitled the inamdar to the tax, operated as a grant of the money to be derived from the tax, and was therefore within the spirit, if not the letter, of the Pensions Act, the object of which was to reserve to the Government the determination of all questions affecting grants of money, the bestowal of which was an act of grace or State policy on the part of the ruling power. JANARDHAN BHASKAR v. 17. ——— Kulkarni vatan—Suit for partition and declaration of right to a specific share in the vatan and to officiate—Money grant—Vatan consisting exclusively of cash allowance.—A suit for a declaration that the plaintiffs are vatandars of a share of a moiety of a kulkarni vatan consisting exclusively of a cash allowance from Government is not a suit relating to a "money grant" within the contemplation of s. 4 of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871). GOVIND SITARAM v. 18. ——— and s. 6—Suit for malikana without certificate of Collector.—In a suit against the Rajah of Palghat and other members of his family for a declaration of the plaintiff's status as the third Rajah, and to recover a sum of money payable to him as such on account of his share of malikana, it appeared that the plaintiff had obtained no certificate under the Pensions Act, 1871, s. 6. Held that the suit was not maintainable. ANDI ACHEN v. 19. ——— and s. 8—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Certificate of Collector to precede suit for malikana payable by Government.—A village, part of an estate, had been made over to the Government by parties, who in consideration received a malikana in perpetuity, or, in other words, a grant of a portion of the revenue in lieu of their proprietary right. Held that the right to the malikana was on the construction of ss. 8 and 4 of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), in the absence of a certificate obtained under that Act, excluded from judicial cognizance in this suit. Vasudev Sada Shio Nodak v. 20. ——— Meaning of the word "pension"—Suit for a cash allowance payable by an inamdar—Necessity of Collector's certificate.—Plaintiff sued, as the trustee of a devasthan, to recover the amount of a cash allowance attached to the worship of certain idols in the village of Ankli. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant, who was the inamdar of the village, received its revenues subject to the payment of the allowance in question, and that he had wrongfully appropriated the latter for the three years preceding suit. Held that the allowance in question was "a grant of money" within the meaning of s. 4 of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), and that the suit would not lie in the absence of the Collector's certificate, though Government was not a party to the suit. VYANKAJI v. 22. ——— Collector's certificate—Execution of decree—"Suit"—Desaigiri hak, sale of.—The word "suit" in s. 4 of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871) does not include execution proceedings. The Collector's certificate is not necessary to validate the sale of a desaigiri hak in execution of a decree. VAJIRAM BHAGVAN v. RAMCHORDJI GOPALJI [I. L. R., 16 Bom., 781]

23. ——— Cash allowance allowed to worship of idol—Personal grant.—A plaintiff claimed to be a co-trustee of certain dargas and entitled to a share in the management and in the profits thereof, which consisted of a certain cash allowance from Government. He sued the defendants for an account and for the recovery of his share. Held that the suit, so far as it related to the cash allowance from Government, required a certificate under s. 4 of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871). A cash allowance attached to the worship of an idol is a grant of money within the meaning of s. 4 of the Pensions Act, 1871. The Pensions Act applies to religious endowments as well as to personal grants. Vyankaji v. Sarjarao Apajirao, I. L. R., 16 Bom., 587, concurred in. NIYA VALI ULHA v. 24. ——— Suit relating to inam land granted before the time of the British Government—Confirmation of inam.—Early in the eighteenth century two villages were granted by the zamindars of Sivaganga and Guntamanikanur to the last of the Naik rulers of Madura for the maintenance of the rank and dignity of his family which was now represented by the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 28. The property was long managed by the representative, for the time being, of the senior line. In 1844 one of the junior members instituted a suit for partition, which terminated in a decree declaring the corpus of the property to be indivisible and the annual produce to be divisible in certain shares. Subsequently in 1857 a compromise was entered into, by which the parties agreed to vary the distribution of the shares, but they agreed that the management of the estate, indivisible and inalienable, should continue to be vested in the eldest line subject to certain supervision on the part of the other members. The compromise was long acted upon by the family; but in 1892 the representative of the senior line died, leaving only his widow and infant sons. The widow, as guardian of the elder son, then entered on the management, and, being gosha, delegated it to a stranger. The plaintiffs, representing a junior line, now sued for the removal of these persons from management and the appointment of another manager, alleging both that they had no right to the management and that they had been guilty of mismanagement.

PENSIONS ACT (XXIII OF 1871)

—continued.

All the members of the family were made parties to the suit. It appeared that the plaintiffs had not received their proper share of the produce, and the defendants in management denied in the pleadings their right thereto. The plaintiffs had not obtained a certificate from the Collector under the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), and it appeared that the grant of the villages had been confirmed as an inam by the British Government. Held (1) that the suit did not fall within the provisions of Pensions Act, s. 4, and a certificate of the Collector was accordingly unnecessary. TIRUMALAI NAIK v. BANGARU TIRUMALAI SAUBI NAIK. I. L. R., 21 Mad., 810

25. ——— and s. 6—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Omission to obtain, previous to suit, certificate enabling Court to entertain suit—Effect of certificate granted after the hearing.—Part of the property in suit consisted of land which was assumed in the Courts below to be held on terms bringing it within the Pensions Act, 1871. After the judgment, which disposed of the principal questions in the case, had been given, final judgment was suspended upon an objection that no certificate had been obtained under the Act. The certificate having been then obtained and delivered to the Court, —Held that the original defect did not prevent the suit proceeding. MAHAMMAD AZMAT ALI KHAN v. LALLA BEGUM. I. L. 26. ——— Collector's certificate—Certificate not obtained when suit filed—Certificate not produced at hearing—Adjournment asked for and refused—Certificate accepted in appeal and placed on record—Practice.—A suit under the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871) is not bad ab initio by reason of its being filed without a Collector's certificate. Where at the hearing of such a suit the necessary certificate was not produced, Held that the Judge ought to have granted the plaintiffs' application for an adjournment, in order that the certificate might be obtained and produced. JIJAJI PRATAPJI RAJE v. 1. ——— s. 11—Toda garas hak—Liability to attachment—Attachment.—A toda garas hak is not exempted from attachment under a decree of a Civil Court by s. 11 of the Pensions Act of 1871. The word "pension" in s. 11 of the Pensions Act is used in its ordinary and well-known sense, viz., that of a periodical allowance or stipend granted, not in respect of any right, privilege, perquisite, or office, but on account of past service or particular merits, or as compensation to dethroned princes, their families, and dependants. A toda garas hak does not come within the meaning of the word "pension," which denotes something different from "a grant of money or revenue" as defined in s. 3 of the Act. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL v. After his death, disputes arose between the wife and the heirs of A in regard to a portion of the amount thus settled on her; and she instituted a suit, on a certificate granted by the Collector under s. 6 of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), in which she prayed for a declaration of her proprietary right in respect of the said money, and of her power to transfer the same. Held that the assignment of the 12th February 1865, having been made before the passing of the Pensions Act, was not invalidated by s. 12 of that Act, which had no retrospective operation. IMTIAZ BEGAM v. The Zamorin, by his will, bequeathed to the plaintiff the malikana due to him from the Government which might be in arrears at the time of his death. The malikana was a political pension of Rs. 6,000 a month, payable quarterly. The Zamorin died on the 6th of August 1892. The plaintiff, having obtained a certificate under Pensions Act, s. 6, now sued the new Zamorin to recover the proportionate amount of the pension for the current quarter up to the time of the Zamorin's death. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the amount sued for. SRIDEVI v. But the Revenue Commissioner has no power vested in him to cancel a certificate granted by the Collector, and there is no rule which provides for the revision by the Revenue Commissioner of the Collector's action in granting certificates or for the cancellation by him of the certificates granted by the latter. BEHMBHAT GOTKHANDI v. I of 1793—Thak or survey, Binding effect of.*—There is nothing in the Regulations to which the permanently-settled estates of Bengal owe their origin to indicate that the Government intended to guarantee to the proprietors the absolute preservation of their estates. By the Regulations the Government declared that, as regards the estates that came within the scope of the permanent settlement, it withdrew its sovereign right to vary the assessments; beyond that, they did not go; they do not constitute a contractual relationship between the Government and the owners of permanently-settled estates, or any such relationship as would debar Government from claiming and exercising against those owners the rights of an ordinary proprietor. Although therefore Government continues to receive the full revenue from the proprietor of a permanently-settled estate for the entire estate, the former is not precluded from claiming title by adverse possession in respect of any portion thereof. When a person is let into possession of a particular property by another claiming it to be his own, the former cannot contend, after the expiration of his tenancy, that the latter (i.e., the person alleging himself to be the owner) cannot acquire an adverse title against him as well as others by efflux of time. Kally Churn Sahoo v. 1. GENERAL CONSTRUCTION OF PLEADINGS.

1. ——— Pleadings in Courts in India.
—Pleadings in Indian Courts should not be construed with the same strictness as they are in the English
Courts. *NAWAB NAZIM OF BENGAL v. AMRAO

2. ——— Primary and secondary relief.—Z and his three minor sons were joint owners of a village which Z hypothecated by deed of simple mortgage to J. Subsequently Z executed another deed of mortgage to J, part of the consideration whereof was the cancellation of the former bond, which was paid off and extinguished accordingly. J, however, fraudulently caused it to appear from the novating document that the former mortgage was still alive, and, after the death of Z, put the bond in suit against Z's widow, who, being ignorant of the fraud, confessed judgment as guardian of her minor sons; and the entire right and interest of Z's heirs were sold in execution of the decree obtained by J. Subsequently the fraud was discovered and Z's sons brought a suit to set aside the execution sale and to recover possession of the property first mortgaged. In regard to three-fourths of this property, they prayed that "possession might be awarded to them by establishment of their right and share by amendment of the revenue papers." In regard to the remaining one-fourth, they prayed for possession "by right of inheritance to Z" by cancellation of the execution sale and of the fraudulent decree. Held that pleadings in the Indian Courts must not be construed with the same strictness as in English Courts; that although in an informal and loose way, what the plaintiff substantially set out, as the primary relief sought, was the entire avoidance of the decree and the proceedings resulting therefrom as vitiated by fraud, and, as secondary relief, to be granted, if the Court should not see its way to setting aside those proceedings, a declaration that they took effect only as regards one-fourth of the property. Nawab Nazim v. Amrao Begam,

2. ADMISSION OF PLAINT.

3. ——— Holiday — Stamp duty. — The reception of a plaint for arrears of rent by the Collector on Good Friday, although by the Circular Order of the Board of Revenue such day is an authorized holiday, is not illegal. There is no legality in the reception of a plaint engrossed on insufficient stamp paper, if the full amount of the stamp duty has been paid at the time. *GOBIND KUMAR CHOWDHRY
v. HARGOPAL NAG*
[3 B. L. R., Ap., 72; 11 W. R., 537

3. FORM AND CONTENTS OF PLAINT.(a) DATE OF CAUSE OF ACTION.

4. ——— Limitation — Civil Procedure
Code, 1859, s. 26.—In a suit to recover possession plaintiff is bound, under s. 26, Act VIII of 1859, to give the date on which he was dispossessed as accurately as possible, especially where one of the issue is whether he has been in occupation of the land within twelve years of suit. *BOYDONATH SURMA v.
OJAN BIBEE* 11 W. R., 233

5. ——— Plaintiff not showing when cause of action arose.—A plaintiff is bound by the Civil Procedure Code to show on the face of the plaint that his cause of action accrued within the period of limitation. Where an assignment to himself is a material part of a plaintiff's cause of action, he ought to allege the fact in his plaint. BROOKE v. GIBBON 21 W. R., 47

6. ——— Objection to cause of action being barred.—S. 32 of Act VIII of 1859 imposes upon the Court of first instance the duty of taking any legal objection apparent on the face of the plaint; see *Balava kom Basangouda v.
Shigouda valad Kadapa*, 7 Bom. A. C., 99, and the fact that a portion of the claim is evidently barred by the law of limitation from which no ground of exemption is stated, is an objection which ought to be noticed by the Court when receiving the plaint; or if not taken notice of, then it may be at any subsequent stage of the suit. *SALUJI KESRAJI v.
RAJSANGJI JALHSANGJI*
[2 Bom., 169; 2nd Ed., 162

7. ——— Taking plaint off the file.—Indefiniteness—Omission to show suit not barred.—A plaint which merely stated that the cause of action arose previous to 21st August 1869 and which did not show that the suit was not barred by limitation, was ordered to be taken off the file.

9. ———— Omission to state when cause of action arose in plaint—Amendment of plaint.—A suit in which the plaint discloses a cause of action falling within the period of limitation should not be dismissed after the framing of issues merely because the Court considers that an erroneous date has been assigned in the plaint as the cause of action. 23. ——— Suit by sole surviving partner to recover partnership debt.—In a suit brought by a sole surviving partner to recover a partnership debt, the plaint, if properly framed, ought to allege that the debt of which recovery is prayed was a partnership debt, that the deceased partner had died before the suit, and that the suit was brought by the plaintiff as surviving partner for his own benefit and that of the estate, but the suit should not be dismissed merely because the plaint did not contain these averments. Jell v. 6. ——— Suit to set aside deed of sale—Civil Procedure Code, s. 50—Inconsistent causes of action—Inconsistency in pleading the suit.—In a suit for cancellation of a sale-deed by the person whose name appeared on it as executant, it was alleged in the plaint that it was a forgery, and that, if it was not a forgery, its execution had been obtained by fraud, and that it was, moreover, void for want of consideration. Held that the gist of the plaintiff's charge against the defendant being that she had never executed a sale-deed in his favour, and that the document set up by him was a forgery. It was not competent to the plaintiff to combine with this charge as an alternative the wholly inconsistent charge that, if she did execute the document, no consideration was received by her or that fraud had been practised upon her. Mahomed Buksh Khan v. It was not suggested that the X Company was a company authorized to sue or be sued in the name of an officer or trustee, nor was it shown that it was registered as a corporation under s. 41 of the Indian Companies Act. Held that the suit was badly framed, and that it should be dismissed. CAMPBELL v. s. 53—Amendment of plaint—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 22.—In a suit to recover a debt to a company which had gone into liquidation, the plaintiff was described in the plaint as "The Official Liquidator, Himalaya Bank, Limited, in liquidation," and the plaint was signed and verified in the same terms. On objection taken by the defendant, the plaint was allowed to be amended, but after the period of limitation prescribed for the suit had expired, so as to read "The Himalaya Bank, Limited, in liquidation, plaintiff." Held by the Full Bench that the plaint as originally filed was in substantial compliance with the provisions of Act VI of 1882; and that, even if it might be considered that the amendment made was necessary, such amendment did not introduce a new plaintiff into the suit so as to let in the operation of s. 22 of Act XV of 1877. *Ghulam Muhammad v. In a suit by an unregistered and unincorporated society the names of the members of the company must be disclosed. If this is not done and if the society is neither a corporation nor a company authorized to sue or be sued in the name of an officer or of a trustee, so as to make the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, s. 435, applicable, the plaint is a bad plaint. *Kylash Chandra Roy v. MAHOMED ISMAIL v. LALLA DHUNDUR KISHORE NARAIN 25 W. R., 39

51. ———— Effect of omission on execution of decree.—The mere omission from the schedule annexed to a plaint of the boundaries of other specifications of land will not exclude from the operation of the decree matters which are by name strictly claimed in the plaint and referred to as such in the decree, and which do not need any further specification. SHIB NARAIN BANERJEE v. RAM NARAIN LUSHKUR 20 W. R., 143

52. ———— Want of identification of the land in dispute.—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1859), ss. 53, 54, and 566.—There is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code authorising the dismissal of a suit on the ground that the land in dispute, as described in the plaint, cannot be identified, and that therefore the decree will be incapable of execution. KAZEM SHEIK v. DANESH SHEIK 1 C. W. N., 574

See RAJNARAIN DAS v. SHAMA NANDO DAS CHOWDERY 1 L. R., 26 Cal., 845

53. ———— Specification of boundaries—Suit to prevent infringement of rights over land.—Where the object of a suit is to prevent the plaintiff's rights over certain lands from being infringed upon, the boundaries of the lands should be given in the plaint. AJOODHIA LALL v. GUMANI LALL

[3 C. L. R., 134

54. ———— Description of immoveable property.—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 26, cl. 5.—Suit for land.—Under Act VIII of 1859, s. 26, cl. 5, all that it is necessary for plaintiff to do is to describe the property in such a manner as may suffice for identification; it is not absolutely necessary to set forth the boundaries. AFTABOODDEEN v. SHUMSOODDEEN MULLICK 18 W. R., 461

55. ———— Description of estate.—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 26, cls. (4) and (5)—Boundaries, Specification of.—From cls. (4) and (5) of s. 26 of Act VIII of 1859, it would appear that, where a whole estate bearing a name is sued for, the boundaries need not be given. RAMDOYAL KHAN v. AJOODHIA RAM KHAN

56. ———— Description of property—Indistinctness of boundaries.—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 26.—The indistinctness of boundaries is, under Act VIII of 1859, not a cause of non-suit. JANOKER CHOWDERANEE v. DWARKANATH CHOWDERY 1 Hay, 555

57. ———— Effect of misdescription—Misdescription of area and boundaries—Suit for enhancement.—As to the effect of misdescription of area and boundaries in a suit for enhancement of rent. TARINER CHURN SANNYAL v. MOHIMA CHUNDER SHAHA 22 W. R., 426

58. ———— Procedure on omission to specify boundaries—Amending plaint.—In a suit in which the plaintiff claimed several plots of land, but did not specify the boundaries in respect of one of them, it was held that the proper course was for the Court to call upon the plaintiff to amend his plaint. JONAB ALI MOLLAH v. GOLAM ASSAD CHOWDERY 21 W. R., 167

59. ———— Procedure in case of irregularity in form of plaint.—Civil Procedure Code 1859, s. 26, cl. 5.—Amendment of plaint.—If a plaint be drawn not in accordance with the provisions of cl. 5, s. 26, Act VIII of 1859, the plaintiff ought to be allowed to amend the plaint without the suit being at once dismissed. BISUNDEN NARAIN SHAH v. GUNGERKISSEN SHAH 2 Hay, 351

60. ———— Contents of plaint.—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 26, 27.—Under s. 26, Act VIII of 1859, the plaint is intended to be a statement of facts, and not merely a prayer for relief. The words "cause of action" in that section, as distinguished from the "relief sought for" and the "subject of the claim," mean the grounds entitling the plaintiff to the remedy he seeks. HURCHURN DOSS v. HAZAREEMULL . . . 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 12

61. ———— Suit for breach of contract—Sale and delivery of goods—Omission to allege readiness and willingness to pay on delivery.—In a suit by the plaintiffs to recover damages from the defendant, a surety upon a contract to deliver coffee to the plaintiffs, the plaintiff did not allege the willingness of the plaintiff to pay on delivery. Held on special appeal that such allegation was no necessary, its absence not having prejudiced the defendant. PIERCE v. OPENDRA SHETTI GANAPATHY

[7 Mad., 364

62. ———— Suit for contribution—Requisites of claim.—A claim for contribution should distinctly set forth the amounts due by each party sued, failing which the plaintiff should be rejected. BHOLANATH CHATTERJEE v. INDER CHAND DOOGUE

[14 W. R., 373

(f) SPECIAL CASES.

63. ———— Suit for damages for tort—Rules of English law.—Plaints must state the relief sought for, the subject of the claim, the cause of action, and when it accrued; and in suits for damages for injury done, the nature of the injury ought to be set out. The strict rules of English law do not necessarily apply to plaints in this country. MOHESH CHUNDER MOOKERJEE v. RAMDHUN PAL

[13 W. R., 248

In every such plaint, plaintiff should name the amount of damages which he seeks to recover as compensation for the injury of which he complains. GIRDHARLAL DAYALDAS v. JAGANNATH GIRDHARBHAI 10 Bom., 193

64. ———— Suit for declaration of title and to have sale set aside.—Amendment of plaint.—Where a person, by right of inheritance, sued for a declaration of his title to a share in a certain sum of money to which the defendants laid claim, and the defendants met that allegation by setting up a sale which the plaintiff admitted.—Held that the plaintiff was bound to mention in his plaint the fact that he had parted with his title, and to allege the particular circumstances—misrepresentation, undervalue, or fraud—on which he relies to have the sale set aside; also that the cause of action arose at some time within the period of limitation applicable to the case. If sufficient cause exists, the Court may require the plaintiff to amend the plaint. AZIMUDIN KHAN v. ZIA-UL-NISSA

[I. L. R., 6 Bom., 309]

65. — Suit for possession and mesne profits—Question raised in plaint.—In a suit to recover, with mesne profits and other incidents, a jirayati village alleged by the plaintiff to form part of his zamindari and to be wrongfully held by defendant by virtue of the execution of a decree of the late Commissioner of the Northern Circars passed in 1854, the defendant pleaded that he held on a permanent lease, subject to a fixed quit rent; that he and his ancestors had held on that tenure since and previously to the permanent settlement. Held that, as the plaintiff praying for the recovery of possession proceeded on the ground, amongst others, of the validity of the grant relied on by the defendant, the question as to the validity of the permanent kuttubandi tenure claimed by the defendant was properly open for determination in the present suit. VAIRIOCHARLA SURYA NARAYANA v. NADIMINTI BHAGAVAT PATANJALI SHASTRI . . . 3 Mad., 120

66. — Suit for redemption of mortgage—Title, Existence and proof of—Limitation.—In a suit for possession of land by redemption of a mortgage, the very nature of which presupposes that the possession of the defendant or his predecessor was lawful, the plaintiff must in his plaint show the title upon which he relies, and therefore a title subsisting at the date of suit. Unless he gives prima facie evidence to show that his suit is within time, he fails to prove his title or subsisting right to the property. Philipps v. Philipps, L. R., 4 Q. B. D., 127; Dawkins v. Lord Penrhyn, L. R., 4 Ap. Cas., 51; Radha Gobind Roy Sahab v. Inglis, 7 C. L. R., 364; Rao Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan, L. R., 9 I. A., 99; *Rajah Kishen Dutt Panday v. 4. VERIFICATION AND SIGNATURE.

67. — Inability to verify—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 28.—Generally plaints should be verified by the plaintiff. The exception under s. 28, Act VIII of 1859, in favour of persons unable to verify should be separately pleaded and considered in each case. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF MUHESUR BUKHSH SINGH

[5 W. R., Mis., 33]

68. — Ground for not verifying personally—Duty of Court on presentation of plaint.—It is incumbent on all Courts, without regard to rank or station, to see that plaints and written statements are subscribed and verified by the parties in person, except when unable to do so by reason of absence or other good cause, when they may be allowed to be subscribed and verified by competent persons only. KEENOO SINGH ROY v. ESHAN CHUNDER ROY

[6 W. R., 218]

69. — Duty of Court on presentation of plaint.—A Court ought never to allow a person other than the plaintiff to verify the plaint, save strictly under the exception which the law permits,—namely, where the plaintiff, by reason of absence or other good cause, is unable to subscribe it (see Act VIII of 1859, s. 28). Whenever the plaint is not presented by the plaintiff in person, the Court should satisfy itself that the verification is actually signed by the plaintiff. NURSING DEB v. RAM MOHUN MOOKERJEE . . . Marsh., 176

RAM MOHUN MOOKERJEE v. NURSING DEB

[W. R., F. B., 64: 1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 68
1 Hay, 379]

70. — Discretion of Court—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 28.—When an application is made to a Court to permit a plaint to be subscribed and verified on behalf of the plaintiff, by a person other than the plaintiff, the Court must exercise the power vested in it by s. 28, Act VIII of 1859, and must decide whether or not the plaintiff, by reason of absence or other good cause, is unable to subscribe and verify the plaint himself. MUHESUR BUKHSH SINGH v. SHEO NARAIN SINGH

[6 W. R., Mis., 59]

71. — Absence on other good ground.—A plaintiff may be excused from verifying his plaint, not only by reason of his absence, but also for any other good cause to the satisfaction of the Court. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF LEELA NUND SINGH . . . 7 W. R., 166

72. — Verification by person other than plaintiff—Notice.—When a plaint is subscribed and verified by a person other than the plaintiff, notice should be given to the defendant; nothing more formal need be done by way of notice to support an application for the admission of the plaint, if the person verifying is qualified in other respects according to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. PUDDOMOKEY DOSSEE v. SHAMA CHURN CHUCKREBUTTY . . . 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 226

73. — Improper verification—Plaint alleging matter not personally known.—Where the plaint alleges matter which cannot be personally known to the person making the verification, and which is not stated to be on information and belief, a verification which does not distinguish how much is true to the knowledge of the person making it, and what is alleged to be true on information and belief, does not fulfil the requirements of s. 52, Act X of 1887. SOLOMON v. ABDUL AZIZ

[4 C. L. R., 366]

74. ——— Personal knowledge of facts—Information and belief—Personal knowledge—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 50, 51—Act XII of 1879, s. 11.—In all cases, whether a plaint is verified by the plaintiff or by some other person, the party verifying should state shortly what paragraphs he verifies of his own knowledge, and what paragraphs he believes to be true from the information of others. IN THE MATTER OF UPENDRO LALL BOSE I. L. R., 6 Calc., 675; 7 C. L. R., 413

75. ——— Civil Procedure Code, s. 52—Form of verification of plaint.—In order to constitute a proper verification of a plaint within the meaning of s. 52 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is necessary for the person verifying, if all the facts are within his knowledge, to state distinctly that they are to his knowledge true; and if he has knowledge as to some and only information and belief as to others, to state to which he speaks from his knowledge and to which from his information and belief. A verification in the form—"To the limit (or extent) of my knowledge the purport of this is true," is not such a verification as satisfies the requirements of s. 52 of the Code. In the matter of Upendro Lal Bose, I. L. R., 6 Calc., 675, referred to. GIRDHARI v. KANHAIYA LAL I. L. R., 15 All., 59

76. ——— Allegation of fraud—Practice.—In a case where the plaintiffs set up gross fraud, and where the case depends mainly upon the personal knowledge of the plaintiffs, it is imperative on the plaintiffs, or one of them, to verify the plaint. PROTAP CHUNDER BANERJEE v. KRISHTO KISHORE SHAHA I. L. R., 8 Calc., 885

See JARDINE, SKINNER & Co. v. SHURNOMOYEE [24 W. R., 215]

77. ——— Allegation of fraud.—Where a plaint contained numerous allegations of fraud some of which must have been true or false to the plaintiff's own knowledge, and was signed and verified on the plaintiff's behalf by his general attorney,—Held that the defendants must reasonably require the plaintiff to subscribe and verify the plaint himself, and that he should so subscribe and verify. RAJAH OF TOMKURI v. BRADWOOD

[I. L. R., 9 All., 505]

78. ——— Effect of non-verification by real plaintiff—Benami mortgage.—In a suit for possession after foreclosure, defendants urged that C (and not A and B, the plaintiffs) was the actual mortgagee. This was denied by A and B, who obtained a decree. In a subsequent suit brought by the representatives of A and B for mesne profits, they, in conjunction with C, urged that C was the real mortgagee, and C was made a co-plaintiff, but he did not verify the plaint. A decree was given for mesne profits in favour of C, the plaintiff. Held that the fact that C had not verified the plaint was no sufficient ground for dismissing the suit. ROY MOHANLALL MITTRA v. BISHNU CHUNDRA CHATTERJEE I B. L. R., A. C., 100

S. C. ROY MOHUN LALL MITTRA v. BUKHO SOONDUREE DEBIA 10 W. R., 145

79. ——— Partners—Suit by firm.—Where the plaintiffs described themselves as lately carrying on business under the name of C & Co.,—Held that there was no irregularity in the plaint being signed by C & Co. and verified only by A B, one of the partners. LAOHLAN v. ABDULLA [5 B. L. R., Ap., 89]

80. ——— Signature by one partner of the firm—Act VIII of 1859, s. 27—Practice.—By the practice of the Court, in a suit brought by a firm, one partner can, without having obtained special leave, verify the plaint on his own behalf and also on behalf of his co-partners. Quere—Whether such a practice is correct, or ought to be allowed to continue. RAMCHUNDER v. CHOORNE LALL 12 B. L. R., 35

81. ——— False verification—Verification by mooktear—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 24.—The verification of a plaint signed with the name of the plaintiff by her mooktear, and which does not aver what is false, but attempts to do what the law estops her from doing, is not a false verification within the meaning of s. 24, Act VIII of 1859. ROSHUN JEHAN v. ENAYET HOSSAIN

[W. R., F. B., 41; Marsh., 127
1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 44]

82. ——— Subscription by agent—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 51.—Under s. 51 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877), the Court may in its discretion admit a plaint which has been subscribed by an authorized agent of the plaintiff. SURNOMOYEE v. POOLIN BEHARY MUNDUL [3 C. L. R., 15]

83. ——— Civil Procedure Code, 1877, ss. 36, 51.—S. 36, read along with s. 51, of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877) shows that a plaint which may be presented by an authorized agent may in like manner be subscribed by him, and that subscription would be a compliance with s. 51. DHUNPUT SINGH BAHADOOR v. JHOMUK KHAWAS [3 C. L. R., 579]

84. ——— Signature and verification by agent—Civil Procedure Code (X of 1877 as amended by Act XII of 1879), ss. 51 and 52.—A plaint, signed by a person holding a general power-of-attorney to sue on behalf of the plaintiff, is properly signed within the meaning of the proviso in s. 51 of the amended Civil Procedure Code. The Court must be satisfied, under s. 52, that a person, other than the plaintiff, verifying the plaint, is acquainted with the facts of the case; but in the case of a person holding a general power-of-attorney, or of any other recognised agent, the Court will not insist on any extreme stringency of proof. S. 52 does not require the verification of a plaint to be made in the presence of an officer of the Court; but, having regard to the necessity of satisfying the Court that the person, other than the plaintiff, who verifies the plaint, is acquainted with the facts of the case, it is desirable that a verification by such a person should be made in the presence of the Court unless the Court be satisfied that there is sufficient ground for dispensing with his attendance. KASTALINO v. RUSTOMJI DADARHOY

85. ——— Plaint signed and verified by the pleader of the guardian—Right of the minor to sue for possession in Mamlatdar's Court.—A minor may sue or be sued in a Mamlatdar's Court, he being represented by a properly appointed guardian. A guardian mother having on behalf of her minor son brought a possessory suit in a Mamlatdar's Court.—Held that the pleader appointed by her could sign and verify the plaint. SAIFULLA v. HAJI MIYA . . . I. L. R., 24 Bom., 238

86. ——— Verification by unauthorized person—Removal from file—Practice.—When a plaint has been verified by a person who has not shown to the Court that he is a person competent to verify it, the Court will order the plaint to be removed from the file. OVEREND, GURNEY & Co. v. STEELE . . . 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 39

87. ——— Irregular verification—Dismissal on ground of improper verification after admission of plaint.—The Judge on appeal dismissed a suit on the ground that the plaint was verified by an agent, when it might and ought to have been verified by the plaintiff himself. Held that, the plaint having been admitted, the suit ought not to be dismissed for this defect, but the Judge might properly have required the verification of the plaintiff to be supplied. GOKUL CHUNDER v. BUREEK BEGUM

[Marsh., 344: 2 Hay, 325]

88. ——— False verification—Waiver of objection.—A case having come on for hearing, the verification of the plaint was found to be false. Upon this plaintiff applied to withdraw the suit with permission to bring a fresh suit. The Munsif rejected the application and dismissed the suit with costs. Held that, as the defendant had filed a written statement and had not objected to the verification, it was the duty of the Munsif to dispose of the case on its merits, dealing afterwards as he thought fit with the party making the false verification. SHAMA SOONDUREE DEBIA v. ROHIMOODDIN SINDAR

[24 W. R., 71]

89. ——— Objection to verification—Verification of plaint by agent.—It is not competent to a Judge of a Small Cause Court to raise any objection to the verification of a plaint by an agent, after such verification has been expressly sanctioned by him at the commencement of the suit. SUTTOCHURN GHOSAL v. SUROOP CHUNDER DOSS

90. ——— Signature of plaint by one of several co-plaintiffs—Parties named as co-plaintiffs—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), ss. 30 and 34—Limitation.—It is not necessary that all the persons named in the plaint as co-plaintiffs should sign and verify the plaint, there being no rule that a person named as a co-plaintiff is not to be treated as a plaintiff unless he signs and verifies the plaint. Three suits for money were filed by one of three joint-creditors, the others being named as co-plaintiffs with him in the plaints, which he alone signed and verified. An order was made by the Court after the filing of the plaints (and at a time when he could not have been added as a plaintiff, the debt being barred by limitation) that one of these joint-creditors should be added as a co-plaintiff, as if he had not been on the record already. Held that all the joint creditors became plaintiffs when the plaints were filed, the order adding parties being inoperative, and that the suits when instituted were not defective for want of parties. MOHINI MOHUN DAS v. BUNGSHI BUDDAN SAHA DAS . . . I. L. R., 17 Cal., 580

91. ——— Sufficiency of verification—Civil Procedure Code, s. 53.—A suit was brought by the manager of the M Bank against the executrix of B to recover a sum of money as due upon a bond executed by B in favour of the Bank. The plaint began thus: "George Henry Webb, Manager of the abovenamed plaintiff's business, states as follows," and proceeded to state that the deceased was, at the time of his death, "indebted to the plaintiff," and to set forth the cause of action in detail. It was signed and verified thus: "For the M Bank, Limited, G. H. Webb, manager." The Court of first instance returned the plaint for amendment under s. 53 of the Civil Procedure Code, because the plaint was set out as made by George Henry Webb as manager, and not as on the part of the Bank. Held that this ground did not come within s. 53 of the Code, as it was clear that the circumstances set out in the plaint applied to the case of the plaintiff Bank, and the plaint sufficiently fulfilled the requirements of the Code that the facts which the plaintiff considers essential should be concisely and clearly set out, and that the verification should be made by some one acquainted with these facts. MUSSOORIE BANK v. BARLOW . . . I. L. R., 9 All., 188

92. ——— Verification of plaint by acting manager—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 51 and 435—Principal officer of a Corporation or Company.—The Manager at Lucknow of the local branch of the Delhi and London Bank was authorized by a power-of-attorney under the seal of the company in London, to sue for debts due to the Bank, and to substitute any person for himself, besides doing other acts of management. A power-of-attorney, executed by him as manager, appointing the accountant of the Bank to be its attorney in Lucknow, did not contain express authority to the person so empowered to sue for debts due to the Bank. The accountant conducted, under this power, the chief business of the branch, and, while he was so conducting it, this suit was instituted against defendants, of whom some objected that he was not authorized to sign and verify the plaint. Held that s. 51, Civil Procedure Code, regulating proceedings by or on behalf of ordinary plaintiffs, did not apply, but that s. 435 was applicable, the acting manager appointed as abovementioned being a principal officer of the Bank Corporation within the meaning of that section. DELHI AND LONDON BANK v. OLDEHAM I. L. R., 21 Cal., 60 [L. R., 20 I. A., 139]

93. — Suit by agent of an unincorporated society—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 485—Corporation.—A suit in ejectment as against a trespasser was brought by a person signing the plaint as “for and as Superintendent and Principal Officer of the Estate of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church of New York.” The plaintiff was not shown to be a member of the Board, nor did he set up any possessory title of his own. Held that, inasmuch as the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church of New York was not a corporation or company authorized to sue and be sued in the name of an officer or trustee within the meaning of s. 485 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and also as the person signing the plaint in the manner above described did not profess to be suing on his own possessory title to the land in respect of which ejectment was claimed, the suit must be dismissed. Jaigopal v. Kaulashar Roy, Weekly Notes, All. (1882), 182; Muhammed Yusuf v. Sukhnath, Weekly Notes, All. (1887), 55; and Aster v. Whillock, L. R., 1 Q. B., 1, distinguished. YUSUF BAG v. 94. — Result of defective verification—Amendment—Procedure—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 52, 53, and 578—Irregularity not affecting merits.—If the verification of a plaint is discovered to be defective at any time whilst the suit is before the Court of first instance, the plaint may be amended by the Court. If such defect be not discovered until the suit comes on appeal before an Appellate Court, such Court may, if it thinks fit, return the plaint to the Court of first instance to be amended by it. But where the defect is such that it is covered by the provisions of s. 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure, there is no necessity for the Appellate Court to take any steps to procure the amendment of the plaint. In any event, a defect in the verification of a plaint will not of necessity result in the dismissal of the suit. Balagobind Das v. Ganno Bibi, Weekly Notes, All. (1896), 75, referred to. A plaint filed by three joint plaintiffs was verified by each in the form: “The contents of the petition of plaint are true to the best of my knowledge and belief.” Held that this form of verification, though not free from ambiguity, was in substantial compliance with the provisions of s. 52 of the Code of Civil Procedure. RAJIT RAM v. correct defective verification.—The substantial portion of a plaint, consisting of the statement of the claim of the plaintiffs and the prayer, was written upon two sheets of plain paper and verified by the plaintiffs. Subsequently to the affixing of the plaintiff's signatures, a front sheet, consisting of a piece of stamped paper with the name of the Court and the names and addresses of the parties, was added, and the plaint thus composed filed in Court. Held that the verification was defective, but that the suit ought not to have been dismissed. The plaintiffs ought to have been allowed an opportunity of amending the plaint by making a proper verification. FATEH CHAND v. MANSAB RAI I. L. R., 20 All., 442

96. — Plaint not signed by plaintiff or his authorized agent—Effect of such want of signatures—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 51, 578.—The mere fact that the plaint in a suit has not been signed by the plaintiff named therein or by any person duly authorized by him in that behalf as required by s. 51 of the Code of Civil Procedure will not necessarily make the plaint absolutely void. A defect in the signature of the plaint, or the absence of signature, where it appears that the suit was in fact filed with the knowledge and by the authority of the plaintiff named therein, may be waived by the defendant, or, if necessary, cured by amendment at any stage of the suit, and having regard to s. 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is not a ground for interference in appeal. *Rajit Ram v. [2 Bom., 169; 2nd Ed., 162]

100. — Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1852), ss. 42, 45, and 53.—On the question of amending a plaint, s. 53 of the Civil Procedure Code should be read with ss. 42 and 45; that it is the intention of the Legislature that all matters in dispute should be disposed of in the same suit. The proviso to s. 53 is not intended to interfere with this. SARAL CHAND MITTER v. MOHUN BISHI I. L. R., 25 Calc., 371
[2 C. W. N., 18, 201]

101. — Discretion of Judge—Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, s. 53.—The amendment of a plaint under s. 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) is in the discretion of the Judge, and is not the right of the suitor in all circumstances. It is not enough for a plaintiff to show that the amendment does not alter the character of the suit. TAPIRAM v. SADU
[I. L. R., 21 Bom., 570]

102. — Civil Procedure Code, s. 53—Limitation—Area of property claimed in suit for pre-emption described as less than the true area.—A Court is not precluded from returning a plaint for amendment because at the time it is returned for amendment the period of limitation for the suit may have expired. The plaintiff in a suit for pre-emption, after filing his plaint, discovered that the property in suit had been described by mistake as being of a slightly less area than it was in reality. Held that the Court had power and ought to have allowed the plaint to be amended, and that the amendment was not precluded by the fact that, at the time when the application for amendment was made, the limitation for the suit had expired. Held also that such misdescription would not render the suit liable to the objection that the plaintiff had sought to pre-empt only a part of the property sold. BAKAT-UN-NISSA v. 106. — Time for amendment—Amendment after settlement of issues.—Amendment of a plaint is not allowable after issues are fixed. AMUR NARAIN alias NERPUT SUHAYE v. RUGHOO-BUNSEEN KOONWUR 5 W. R., 284

107. — Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 53—Amendment subsequently to first hearing.—The words in paragraph 1 of s. 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877) "at or before the first hearing" are merely directory and not mandatory, and therefore a plaintiff may, subsequently to the "first hearing," amend his plaint, provided such amendment does not alter the original character of his suit. The plaintiffs (mortgagors) in a suit against their mortgagees sought only for production of the mortgage-deed or for an account, although the averments in the plaint warranted a prayer for redemption. Subsequently to the first hearing of the suit, they applied to be allowed to amend the plaint by adding a prayer for redemption. Held that the provisions of s. 53 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) did not preclude the Court from permitting the amendment to be made. MOHED v. DONGRE I. L. R., 5 Bom., 609

108. — Amendment after return for amendment in fixed time—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 53.—Semble—That where at the first hearing of a suit the plaint is returned for amendment within a fixed time under the provisions of s. 53 of Act X of 1877, and it is amended accordingly, it cannot afterwards be again returned for amendment. BADR-UN-NISSA v. MUHAMMAD JAN I. L. R., 2 All., 671

109. — Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 53—Practice—Amendment of plaint at a date subsequent to first hearing.—Held (OLDFIELD, J., dissenting) that, under s. 53 of the Civil Procedure Code, a plaint can be rejected, returned for amendment, or amended by the Court of first instance only at or before the first hearing of the suit, and not after the first hearing thereof. *Modhe v. extension of time originally allowed.—On the 6th April 1891 the plaintiffs obtained an order giving them leave to amend the plaint and proceedings in the suit. By the order this amendment was to be made on or before the 30th April 1891. On the 18th August 1891 the plaintiffs obtained a summons calling on the defendants to show cause why the time allowed for amendment should not be extended for a month, and why the hearing of the suit should not be postponed. Held, making the summons absolute, that although the time originally fixed for amendment had expired, the Judge had a discretion to extend the time, and that under the circumstances the plaintiffs were entitled to the order asked for. BHAGWANDAS BAGLA v. 113. ——— Allowing new cause of action—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 29 and 31.—Ss. 29 and 31 of the Civil Procedure Code empower the Court to permit such amendment in the plaint as may enable the Court to give relief in respect of the wrong originally complained of, but not to allow totally new causes of action to be added by a supplemental plaint. RAJLOO MULL v. NANUK

[1 N. W., 171; Ed. 1873, 250]

114. ——— Ground for amendment—Insufficient disclosure of cause of action.—Where the plaint does not sufficiently disclose the cause of action, and a cause of action exists, the plaintiff should have been allowed to amend it under s. 32, Code of Civil Procedure, 1859; not being so allowed, he is at liberty to prove any cause of action which is not inconsistent with the plaint. LUCKHEE PREE DEBIA v. BRINDABUN DEY 12 W. R., 313

115. ——— Misstatement of cause of action.—The plaintiff, having failed in an application under s. 441 of the Penal Code, brought a suit in a Civil Court for possession and for the demolition of a wall or fence put up by the defendant, dating his cause of action from his failure in the Criminal Court. In the Court of first instance, he obtained a decree for possession. The Judge on appeal dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that he had no power to set aside a Magistrate's order under the law cited. Held that, if the Judge was of opinion that the plaintiff had misstated his cause

116. ——— Rejection of plaint for prolixity—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 29.—If a plaint not only asks for relief which a Court can afford, but seeks to open up matters already adjudicated upon in another suit, the Judge (instead of rejecting the plaint for prolixity under s. 29) should entertain the suit and adjudicate upon the matters not adjudicated upon in the former suit, amending the plaint by striking out the issues relating to the matters adjudicated upon. ROSUN JEHAN v. 117. ——— Civil Procedure Code, s. 53—Alteration of the relief prayed for.—The restriction as to amendment of a plaint is only as to the nature of the suit: the law prohibits any such amendment as would change the fundamental character of a suit, but an alteration in the relief does not change the character of a suit. Where a purchaser of a mortgage-bond at a sale in execution of decree sued to enforce the bond, but did not pray for sale of the mortgaged property,—Held that he might properly have been allowed to amend his plaint and add a prayer for that relief. KASINATH DAS v. [I L. R., 20 Calc., 805]

118. ——— Amendment transforming claim—Suit for rent converted into suit for ejectment—Variance between pleading and proof—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 53 and 562.—An amendment of a plaint which materially transforms the nature of the claim cannot be made under s. 53 of the Civil Procedure Code, and certainly not in appeal. S. 53 permits amendment of the plaint before judgment, and not after. The larger powers conferred on Appellate Courts by s. 562 do not authorize such a material transformation of a suit in appeal. BAI SHRI MAJIRAJBA v. MAGANLAL BHAIHANKAR I L. R., 19 Bom., 303

119. ——— Altering character of suit—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 53—Adding prayer for possession to suit for declaration of title.—S. 53 of the Civil Procedure Code, which provides that a plaint cannot be amended so as to convert a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character, does not prevent a plaintiff who has been ousted after suit brought for declaration of title, from amending his plaint by adding a prayer for possession. MELLUS v. Amendment of plaintiff—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 54—Multifarious suit—Malabar law—Stanom.—A suit was brought by the junior members of a tarwad, which consisted of three stanoms and three tarwadies, against the karnavan and others, including certain persons to whom he had alienated some tarwad property. The plaintiff, as originally framed, prayed (1) for the removal of the karnavan; (2) for a declaration that defendants Nos. 2 to 8, the senior anandravans, had forfeited their right of succession to him; (3) for the appointment of the plaintiff in his place; (4) for a declaration that his alienations were invalid as against the tarwad; and (5) for possession of the property alienated. Subsequently, the plaintiff was amended by the order of the Court by striking out items 2 and 5 of the prayer, and finally the plaintiffs further amended the plaintiff and sued only for a declaration that the alienations in question were invalid. The lower Court passed the declaratory decree prayed for. Held that the lower Court was wrong in allowing the plaintiff to be amended after the first hearing, because the case on which the decree was passed was essentially different from that disclosed in the plaintiff; and that the appeal must be allowed accordingly. MAHOMED v. Act III of 1865, s. 1—Deceit—Unilateral mistake.—On the 21st of January 1883 the plaintiff contracted to purchase from the defendant the right to receive dividend on 60 shares of the Empress Mill at Rs7 per share, the plaintiff being under an impression that the dividend was to be declared on some subsequent day. The plaintiff deposited Rs100 with the defendant as part payment of the purchase-money. Subsequently it was ascertained that the dividend had been already declared on 17th January 1883 (i.e., four days before the contract) at Rs25. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendant to have the contract declared cancelled, and sought to recover the deposit of Rs100, with interest. The Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Broach, being of opinion that the contract was in its nature a sutta or wagering contract, rejected the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff applied to the High Court, under its extraordinary jurisdiction, to set aside the lower Court's decision. Held that, in the first instance, the plaint, as framed, not disclosing any cause of action, ought to have been returned for amendment. It should either have alleged a mistake common to both parties to the contract, or should have contained an allegation of fraud, on the defendant's part, inducing the plaintiff to enter into the agreement. The mere circumstance that the contract was "caused by one of the parties to it being under a mistake as to a matter of fact" would not, under s. 22 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), have made the contract voidable. The High Court reversed the lower Court's decision in order that the plaintiff might be given an opportunity to amend his plaint so as to show that his action was one for deceit. DAYABHAI TRIBHOVANDAS v. The lower Court held that the right to sue did not accrue until the property had been demanded and refused; that the plaint contained no allegation of such demand and refusal; that the plaint could not be amended by the insertion of such an allegation after answer filed; and that therefore the suit could not be maintained. Held, reversing the decree, that even if the present case were one in which the provision as to demand could have any application at all, still the suit ought not to have been dismissed on that technical ground, when the defendant by his answer traversed the whole of the allegations in the plaint and pleaded the statute of limitation. MANIKYA ROW LAKSHMAYAR v. owner in equity.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain land, and prayed to set aside the sale of it by the revenue authorities for arrears of assessment due on the land. He alleged that he had let the land to the defendant, on condition of the latter paying the Government assessment and certain rent in cash and kind to the plaintiff; that the defendant, having intentionally made a default in payment of the assessment, fraudulently caused the land to be sold by the revenue authorities and purchased it himself. The defendant traversed the plaintiff's allegations, and stated that he was in possession of the land as purchaser at the revenue sale. The Subordinate Judge rejected the plaintiff's claim, holding that he failed to prove either the defendant's liability to pay the assessment, or any fraud on his part with respect to the sale of the land, and that the sale could not be set aside. His decree was affirmed on appeal by the Assistant Judge on the sole ground that the sale could not be set aside. He did not go into the merits of the case. On appeal to the High Court,—Held that the plaint ought not to have contained any prayer for setting aside the sale, but that, as it contained a prayer for possession, it might be read as praying (or at least that the plaintiff might have been permitted to amend it so that it might simply pray) that the defendant should, under the circumstances alleged by the plaintiff, be declared a trustee of the land for the plaintiff. Held also that, if the plaintiff's allegations were true, the plaintiff would be entitled to such a declaration, and the defendant would be discharged of his sub-tenancy in consequence of his conduct which worked a forfeiture of any right to be continued as tenant. BALKRISHNA VASUDEVI v. 143.—Omission to ask for alternative relief—Frame of suit—Account and discovery.—After parties have come to trial to determine which of two stories is true, the plaintiff cannot be allowed to amend his plaint by abandoning his own story and adopting that of the defendant, and asking relief on that footing: for the question, whether on that footing the plaintiff is entitled to relief, is one to which the defendant's attention has not been called, and which he has had no opportunity of answering. In a suit to recover a specified sum for the hire of cargo-boats and not asking for any other relief, the defendant alleged and proved that he was merely the agent of the plaintiff to find hirers for the boats, and that he was not liable for the hire of the boats. Held that, although prima facie a principal is entitled to an account and discovery from his agent, the plaintiff could not obtain such relief in the suit as framed, and that he could not, after coming to a hearing, be allowed to amend his plaint by inserting an alternative prayer for relief, upon the footing of the case set up by the defendant. SHIBKRISTO SINGH v. execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 50 and 573.—In a suit brought in a District Munsif's Court to declare certain land liable to be sold in execution of a decree for more than Rs. 2,500, the defendants pleaded that the Court had no jurisdiction. The Munsif allowed the plaintiff to amend the plaint by stating that he abandoned his claim to execute the decree against the land for more than Rs. 2,500. On appeal, the District Judge held that the plaint could not be amended after the first hearing. Held on appeal to the High Court that the claim was not one which could be amended, so as to bring the suit within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the District Munsif. ANNAJI v. 145. ——— Allegation of fraud—Alteration of nature of fraud charged.—Where in a suit for repayment of a certain sum which had after a compromise made by the official assignee been paid to a person who had assisted in taking the accounts, such payment being unauthorized by the Court, the plaintiff, as presented, alleged the fraudulent concealment of the payment from the assignee and afterwards, when all the evidence had been taken, and it had been established that the assignee, knew of the payment, this was amended to the statement that if he did know of it he had no power to consent to it, and that his consent would not be binding, the payment being a fraud upon the Court.—Held that the amendment at the stage when it was made was not permissible. ABDUL HOSSEIN ZENAIL v. TURNER . . . I. L. R., 11 Bom., 620 [I. L. R., 14 I. A., 111]

146. ——— Charges of fraud—General allegations of fraud—Amendment of plaint on appeal—Objection taken for first time on appeal.—Where a plaintiff seeks relief on the ground of fraud, and the plaint contains general allegations, but no specific instances of the alleged fraud, it ought to be immediately, on presentation, rejected or returned for amendment, as it does not disclose a cause of action. The plaintiff sued to recover damages caused by the defendant's fraud during his management of the plaintiff's estate from 1870 to 1884. The plaint disclosed no specific instances of the fraud imputed to the defendant. The Court of first instance, without going into evidence, rejected the plaintiff's claim on the preliminary ground that the plaintiff had no right to sue during the lifetime of his adoptive mother. In second appeal, the respondent objected that the plaint was defective. The plaintiff's pleader asked for leave to amend it by specifying certain instances of the alleged fraud. Held that the amendment could not then be allowed, and the suit must fail. KRISHNAJI v. WANKAJI [I. L. R., 18 Bom., 144]

147. ——— Suit by Bank for money against executrix—Civil Procedure Code, s. 53—Order returning plaint for amendment—Form of suit.—A suit was brought by the manager of the M Bank against the executrix of B to recover a sum of money as due upon a bond executed by B in favour of the Bank. The plaint described the defendant as "Mrs. Sarah G. Barlow, of Mussoorie," and stated that she was executrix of the deceased B. It began thus: "George Henry Webb, Manager of the above-named plaintiff's business, states as follows," and proceeded to state that the deceased was, at the time of his death, "indebted to the plaintiff," and to set forth the cause of action in detail. It was signed and verified thus: "For the B Bank, Limited, G. H. Webb, Manager." The Court of first instance returned the plaint for amendment under s. 53 of the Civil Procedure Code, because the suit should not have been brought in the form in which it was brought, but in the form referred to in s. 213 and No. 105 of Sch. IV of the Code. Held, with reference to this ground, that the plaintiff was at liberty to bring a suit for money against any person administering to or representing the estate; and if such suit should be found with reference to the facts in evidence not maintainable, it should be dismissed; but there was no authority for returning a plaint for amendment, when it was found that the suit was not maintainable in the form in which it was brought, in order to amend it so as to convert the suit into one of a different character. MUSSOORIE BANK v. 148. ——— Suit to restrain interference with private right—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 31, 53.—A sued for an injunction to restrain interference with his right to graze cattle on the bed of a certain tank. The other raiyats of the village in whom the same right vested were originally joined as plaintiffs, but the plaint was amended under s. 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and their names were struck off the record. A proved no special damage. Held (1) that the fact that the other raiyats of the village had similar rights did not make A's right a public right in the sense that no action could be brought upon it unless special damage was proved; (2) that the right claimed vested in A severally as well as jointly with the other raiyats, and the amendment of the plaint was not contrary to the provisions of s. 31 or 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure. VENKATACHALA v. 149. ——— Change in form of suit, the cause of action being unchanged—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 53.—The plaintiffs alleged that the defendants had encroached on the bed of a tank, raised embankments, and cultivated crops which interfered with the plaintiffs' supply of water; and they prayed for a decree ejecting the defendants from the land encroached on and restraining them from interfering with it. Held that the Court was not precluded by s. 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure from passing a decree declaring the plaintiffs' right to the water of the tank directing the defendants' embankments, etc., to be removed and regulating the cultivation of their lands; but that the defendants' liberty of cultivation should not be restricted more than was necessary to secure the plaintiffs' supply of water. PULAMADA v. 150. ——— Joint family—Mortgage by a father—Decree against father on mortgage giving possession with interest and costs—Son's liability to satisfy the decree as to interest and costs.—The plaintiff's father mortgaged certain ancestral property for a limited term. A suit was brought on the mortgage against the father, and a decree was passed, directing the mortgaged property to be handed over to the mortgagee for a certain time, and awarding payment of interest and costs by the father. In execution of this decree, the mortgagee sought to recover the costs by sale of the property in question. Thereupon the plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the property was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree against the father on the ground that the debts contracted by the father were for immoral purposes, and that therefore the estate could not be bound by the decree at all. The Court of first instance found that the debts had not been incurred for any immoral purpose, and dismissed the suit. At the hearing of the appeal to the High Court it was alleged that the plaintiffs had separated from their father before the mortgage decree was passed against him, and an application was made on their behalf that the plaint in this case should be amended by inserting an allegation to that effect. Held that the amendment could not be allowed. Such an amendment would entirely alter the points of contention between the parties. In suing in the form adopted by the plaintiffs they doubtless intended to take the chance of getting a greater advantage than they would have obtained if they had sued merely as separated sons. They sought to liberate the property altogether from liability on the ground that the debt was immoral, and that the estate could not therefore be bound by the decree at all. That being so, and the plaintiffs having omitted to allege partition, they could not now ask the Court to put their suit on a new footing. NARAYANRAY DAMODAR v. JAYEYARAU

Act (Madras Act VIII of 1865)—Declaratory decree.—A suit in the Court of a District Munsif to enforce acceptance of a pottah and execution of a muchalka by defendant in respect of a holding in a village to which the plaintiff claimed title, was dismissed as not being maintainable. Held that the suit should not have been dismissed, but the plaint should have been amended by the addition of a prayer for a declaration of the plaintiff's title, and that the Court then would have had jurisdiction to grant by way of consequential relief the relief originally sought. NARASIMMA v. SUBYANARAYANA I. L. R., 12 Mad., 431

154. ——— Suit for rent, Decree for use and occupation in—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 53—Variance between pleading and proof.—A suit was brought for rent of a hat on the basis of a verbal settlement for three years at an annual jama of Rs 70. The defendants denied the settlement. The first Court found for the plaintiff; but on appeal, an objection having been raised by the defendants that the verbal lease was illegal under the Transfer of Property Act, the suit was dismissed. The plaintiffs contended on appeal that the suit should not have been dismissed, but that they were entitled to a decree for use and occupation. Held that a decree for use and occupation of the land by the defendants could not be granted in this case, as that would amount to an amendment raising issues of an entirely different character from those on which the trial was held in the Courts below as a suit for rent, and necessitating a trial upon fresh evidence. Such amendment could not be allowed under s. 53 of the Civil Procedure Code. Lukhes Kanto Dass Chowdhury v. Sumeeruddin Lasker, 13 B. L. R., 243; 21 W. R., 208; Eshan Chunder Singh v. amending the issue, but that he should have done so without striking the names of the plaintiffs out of the plaint. EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY v. JORDAN [4 B. L. R., O. C., 97; 14 W. R., O. C., 11]

156. Hindu widow
—Joinder of plaintiffs one of whom has no right to sue for pre-emption.—The plaintiffs in a suit to enforce a right of pre-emption based on the wajib-ul-urs of a village, which gave the right to “co-sharers,” alleged themselves to be jointly interested in the village, and in their plaint claimed relief jointly. One of the two plaintiffs was the widow of a co-sharer in the village, who, at the time of his death, was a member of a joint Hindu family, and it was held she could not claim pre-emption. Held, with reference to the manner in which the plaint was framed, that the other plaintiff could not claim pre-emption entirely on his own account without amending the plaint, but that it was too late for him to take such a course. Damodar Das v. Gokal Chand, I. L. R., 7 All., 79, referred to. KARAN SINGH v. MUHAMMAD ISMAIL KHAN I. L. R., 7 All., 860

157. Joinder of causes of action—Same parties suing in different capacities—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, ss. 26 and 81.—By the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the New Dhurumsey Poonjabboy Spinning and Weaving Company, the plaintiffs’ firm of M F & Co. were appointed agents of the company for twenty-five years, and it was provided that they should have the general control and management of the company. Cl. 98 of the articles provided that the said firm, as such agents, should have full power and authority (inter alia) to appoint and employ, in or for the purposes of the transaction and management of the affairs and business of the company, such solicitors as they should think proper. An agreement, dated 26th August 1874, was also entered into between the company and the partners in the firm of M F & Co., their executors, administrators, and assigns, for the time being constituting the partnership firm of M F & Co., whereby it was agreed that the said firm should be agents to the company for twenty-five years to buy and sell, etc., and particularly to exercise all the powers contained in cl. 8 of the Articles of Association. Messrs. C & B were duly appointed solicitors to the company, and acted as such for a considerable time. M, one of the members of the said firm of M F & Co., died in the middle of March 1876. The plaintiffs complained that G, one of the shareholders in the company, became desirous of ousting the plaintiffs from the position of agents of the company, and of becoming the managing director of the company; that in July 1881 he procured his own election and that of certain nominees of his as directors of the company; and on the 8th August 1881 procured the passing of a resolution at a Board meeting to the effect that, as Messrs. C & B, the company’s solicitors, were also the solicitors of the agents, it was desirable, for the interests of the company, that a change should be made, and that Messrs. H C &

L be appointed solicitors of the company. The plaintiffs alleged that the only object of passing the said resolution was to facilitate the design of G, of ousting the plaintiffs from their agency, and getting the management of the company for himself; that Messrs. H C & L had been for a long time the solicitors of G, and had been advising him in his designs upon the company and upon the plaintiffs, and they contended that the resolution was a breach of the contract between the company and the plaintiffs and a violation of the Articles of Association of the company. The plaintiffs sued G and two other directors of the company and the company itself, and prayed for an injunction against the defendants to restrain them from committing any breach of the agreement of 26th August 1874 and in particular from carrying into effect the resolution appointing Messrs. H C & L as solicitors for the company, and to restrain them from doing anything inconsistent with the Memorandum and Articles of Association. The defendants contended that the contract of the 26th August 1874 had been determined by the death of M, and that the powers conferred on the agents by cl. 98 of the Articles were, subject to the general powers of management, vested in the directors by the Articles, and that the case was not one in which an injunction could be granted. Counsel on behalf of the plaintiffs sought to obtain the injunction on the ground that the resolution of the 8th August 1881 appointing Messrs. H C & L solicitors of the company, was contrary to the Memorandum of Association, and therefore ultra vires; and, in order that this point might be pressed against the defendants, it was proposed that the plaint should be amended by alleging a cause of action in two of the plaintiffs as shareholders as well as a cause of action in all the plaintiffs as parties contracting with the company. Held that, under the provisions of ss. 26 and 31 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), the amendment could not be allowed. The plaintiffs, as shareholders and contractors, had not the same cause of action, by which words were meant not only the act complained of, but also the right violated by that act. The rights of the plaintiffs as contractors, alleged to be violated by the resolution, were rights given to them by their agreement; but the rights of the plaintiffs as shareholders were rights secured to them by the Articles of Association. NUSSEEWANJI v. 159. ———— Suit by one member of an undivided Hindu family—Non-joinder of other persons interested in a family business.—In 1887 the plaintiff appointed the defendant to serve for three years as manager of a business in Moulmein, which was the business of the undivided Hindu family to which the plaintiff belonged. In 1893 the plaintiff, without joining the other members of his family, sued the defendant for damages for breach of the contract of service, and it was held that the suit was not maintainable in the absence from the record of the other partners in the business. Held that by reason of the fact that an amendment of the plaint might deprive the defendants of the defence of limitation and of the other circumstances in the case, the plaintiff should not be allowed on appeal to amend the plaint by bringing his partners on to the record. *ALAGAPPA CHETTI v. The property was alleged to have been entrusted by the testator in 1893 to the defendant. The will contained no express appointment of executors, but it provided that the plaintiffs should take care of the estate during the minority of a son who was to be adopted to the testator, and imposed upon them the duty of providing for the maintenance of persons therein named. The adoption having taken place after the institution of the suit,—Held that, under the circumstances of the case, the plaint should be amended on second appeal by substituting the adopted son as plaintiff with one of the present plaintiffs as his next friend. *SESHAMMA v. The plaintiff sued the Magistrate to establish his right to the land, alleging that it was his private property, and that the Magistrate's order was wrong. The Assistant Judge who tried the suit dismissed it, holding that it did not lie against the Magistrate. On appeal to the High Court,—Held that the Assistant Judge might have properly permitted the plaintiff to amend his suit by striking out the name of the first class Magistrate as defendant, and substituting in that capacity the Secretary of State for India in Council. The High Court accordingly reversed the decree of the Assistant Judge, and remanded the suit for re-trial on the merits, after making the amendment directed. NILKANTHAPA v. MAGISTRATE OF SHOLAPUR

On appeal, the High Court, following the decision in Nilkanthappa Malkaps v. Magistrate of Solapur, I. L. that he was a license-holder. The present suit was brought against the Government represented by the Deputy Commissioner for damages on account of wrongful acts of the Extra Assistant Commissioner, who was made second defendant. The Judge, holding that where a servant does a wrongful act maliciously he is personally liable and the master is free, left it to the plaintiff to say against whom he would proceed. The plaintiff elected to proceed against Government and obtained a decree for a part of his claim. In the lower Appellate Court the Judges were divided in opinion, the Recorder holding that the first Court was justified in allowing the plaintiff to abandon his suit against the second defendant, to whom malice had been imputed, and that the suit was still maintainable against the Government; and the Judicial Commissioner, considering it irregular to allow this action, inasmuch as the claims for damages on account of the illegal and malicious acts of the second defendant and for damages for non-issue of license by the first defendant were inconsistent with each other. Held by the High Court that the view of the Recorder was correct. Nevertheless, the plaintiff ought not to have been put to the option of abandoning his suit against one or other defendant, but the suit should have been tried out. Held, too, that the allegations against the two defendants were distinct, but not inconsistent, and that the Judicial Commissioner had taken too strict a view of the plaint. *VYTHEELINGUM v. The Judge amended the plaint by striking out the portion "regarding the reliefs other than the relief for damages," and then, holding that the claim for amendment and presentation to the proper Court—Misjoinder of Government officer as defendant.—Where a plaint is presented to the Judge of a district, in which plaint an officer of Government is added as a nominal defendant, no cause of action being alleged against him, the proper course for the District Court to adopt is either to reject the plaint or to call upon the plaintiff to amend it by striking out the name of the officer improperly added as a defendant, and, upon the plaintiff consenting to do so, to return the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation to the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it. Where the District Judge did not adopt this course, but proceeded to try the cause, the High Court annulled his decree and (the plaintiff consenting to amend his plaint) returned it to him for amendment and presentation to the proper Court. SHERIDHAR HARI v. PLAINT—continued.6 RETURN OF PLAINT—continued.

185. ————— Return for

(Act XIV of 1882) does not allow of a plaint or memorandum of appeal being returned to the plaintiff, or appellant, after a case has been heard on its merits, and just as the plaintiff or appellant discovers that the Court is about to pronounce an adverse decision. There is no provision in the Code for the return of a plaint to a plaintiff after it has been admitted, and the court-fee stamps thereon cancelled. Even if the Code allowed the High Court to return a plaint after the court-fee stamps have been cancelled, the plaint could not be again legally presented in any Court without new stamps being affixed to it. The executive Government alone have power to remit court-fees, and no Court or Judge has legal authority to admit a plaint which bears only cancelled stamps, or to direct a subordinate Court to admit such a document. *JAGJIVAN JAVHERDAS SETH v. 189. ———— Return of, on second appeal.—The plaintiff sued three defendants on a bond alleged to have been executed by them to the plaintiff. Two of the defendants did not appear or make any defence to the suit. The second defendant only appeared, and objected to the jurisdiction of the Court; but his objection was overruled, and a decree was made against all three defendants. On appeal the lower Appellate Court reversed the decree, holding that the Court of first instance had no jurisdiction. HELD that, on finding that the Court of first instance had no jurisdiction, the lower Appellate Court ought to have ordered the plaint to be returned. To the claim arising out of the agency transactions the plaintiff joined a claim on account of a partnership transaction, which claim was triable by the Court of the District Munsif at Tellicherry. The Subordinate Judge held that he had no jurisdiction to try the claim arising out of the agency transaction, found that nothing was due to the plaintiff on account of the partnership transaction, and dismissed the suit. HELD that the plaint ought to have been returned to the plaintiff with the proper endorsement as required by s. 57 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. *KHIMJI JIVRAJU SHETTU v. was filed in a Court within the jurisdiction of which the property was not situate and was held not to lie in that Court, as all the defendants did not reside within the jurisdiction of that Court, even though the relief sought could have been obtained through their personal obedience.—Held that in such a case the Judge ought not to dismiss the suit, but return the plaint to be presented to the proper Court under s. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code. ISAK v. The Court held as regards claim (1) that the plaint did not disclose a cause of action, as it was not alleged that the defendant had disputed the plaintiff's right; as regards claim (2) that, with reference to the terms of s. 29 of Act XVIII of 1873, the plaintiff's cause of action had not yet arisen; and as regards claim (3) that it was cognisable in a Court of revenue;—and it directed that under s. 57 of Act X of 1877 the plaint should be returned to the plaintiff to be presented to the Revenue Court. Held that, under the circumstances, the plaint should have been rejected and not returned. NAGAR MAL v. 195. — Return for undervaluation.—Where it appears that the relief sought in a suit has been undervalued, and that the Court is not competent, by reason of the real value of the relief sought, to try the suit, the plaint must be returned to the plaintiff under s. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code, although the defendant may have been called upon to enter upon his defence and has filed his written statement. An order dismissing a suit on the ground that, by reason of the value of the relief sought, the Court has no jurisdiction, is an order affecting the merits, and an appeal lies from such order. The plaint having been presented in the Subordinate Judge's Court, the Subordinate Judge, on the authority of Jagjivan Javerdhas Seth v. Magdum Ali, I. L. 202. ——— Ground for rejection—Undervaluation of suit—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 81.—In a suit in a Munsif's Court it was found, after issues had been fixed and some evidence recorded, that the claim had been undervalued, and that the proper valuation would carry it beyond the jurisdiction of the Munsif. The plaint was accordingly returned, and additional stamps having been filed, the case was tried by the Principal Sudder Ameen. The Judge on appeal held that the plaint had been illegally returned by the Munsif, and that the act of the Principal Sudder Ameen in proceeding to try the case was illegal. He accordingly dismissed the suit. Held that the Munsif was right, under s. 81, Act VIII of 1859, in not dismissing the suit, but rejecting the plaint; and that, when the same plaint was filed with the proper amount of stamp duty in the Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen, that Court had jurisdiction to try the case.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the claim was for recovery of money, and should have been valued at Rs 1,000. He therefore called on the plaintiffs to make up the stamp to that required on this valuation; and the plaintiffs refusing, he dismissed their suit under s. 54 (b) of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). Held that in any case the Subordinate Judge was wrong. If the suit was really one for an account, the plaintiffs were entitled to value the relief they sought approximately, as they had done; if it were not one for an account, but for recovery of money, still the Subordinate Judge had no power himself to value the relief sought, but

208. ——— Reference to document not in plaint—Claim for damages for malicious prosecution.—A Judge, in considering, under s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code, whether he should admit or reject a plaint, is wrong in referring to documents and facts not stated in, or annexed to, the plaint, nor ascertained by him by interrogation of the plaintiff, although such documents and facts may have been on record in other proceedings in the Judge's Court. In a plaint claiming damages for an unsuccessful criminal prosecution of the plaintiff by the first defendant, and sanctioned by the second defendant as a Subordinate Judge, the plaintiff (though stating in the plaint that the second defendant "maliciously and without authority" sanctioned the prosecution, and that the Magistrate before whom it was brought held that there was no cause whatever for the charge) did not allege in the plaint that the first defendant prosecuted him (plaintiff) maliciously and without any reasonable or probable cause, or that the prosecution was sanctioned by the second defendant without reasonable or probable cause. Held that the plaint was properly rejected, and that there was no good ground for allowing the plaint to be amended, the plaintiff having delayed the filing of it until the last day but one allowed by the law of limitation.

The defendant subsequently applied for execution of this decree. The trustees, to whom the debtors' assets were made over under the deed, together with the debtors, now brought a suit in the same Court for an injunction restraining the defendant from executing or proceeding to execute his decree. The plaint was rejected by the District Judge after it had been registered and numbered, and a written statement had been filed. Held that the Court had jurisdiction to reject the plaint under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 54, at that stage of the suit. VENKATESA TAWKEE v. 3. Penal Code, s. 211—False charge—Irregular procedure.—A prisoner, charged under s. 211 of the Penal Code with having brought a false charge with intent to injure, by accusing A of having caused the death of a person by doing a rash or negligent act not amounting to culpable homicide under s. 304A, stated at the trial that the original complaint made by him was false, and that he made it unthinkingly. The Sessions Judge treated this statement as a plea of guilty, and sentenced the prisoner to rigorous imprisonment. No record of the prisoner's plea, as required by s. 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code, appeared on the proceedings, nor did it appear that the charge had been explained as well as read to the prisoner, and the Judge considered that the original complaint did not amount to a false charge of an offence under s. 304A. Held that the conviction was bad. EMPRESS v. GOPAL DEANUX

Held that such a statement did not amount to a plea of guilty on the charge, and that it was the duty of the Court to try whether the provocation therein disclosed was sufficiently grave and sudden to reduce the offence. *NETAI LUSKAR v. 6. Qualified plea of guilty—Capital charge—Procedure—Practice.—In capital cases where there is any doubt as to whether an accused person fully understands the meaning and effect of a plea of guilty, it is advisable for the Court to take evidence, and not to convict solely on the plea of the accused. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 7. Plea of guilty—Murder—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 302—Confession—Procedure.—The accused, who was a habitual ganja-smoker, was charged with the murder of his wife and infant son. In his confession he stated that he had killed his wife, because she quarrelled with him and objected to go to another village where he proposed a change of house on account of their poverty. He adhered to this statement when placed for trial before the Court of Session. The Sessions Judge treated this statement as a plea of guilty on the charge of murder, convicted the accused, and sentenced him to death, subject to confirmation by the High Court. Held (per JARDINE and CANDY, JJ.) that the accused's statement did not amount to a plea of guilty on the charge of murdering his wife. He alleged a sudden provocation: he ought therefore to have been put on his trial, in order that the Court might ascertain whether the provocation was grave and sudden enough to prevent the offence from amounting to murder. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 5. ——— Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 39—Delegation of authority by duly appointed pleader—Ex-parte decree—Application for new trial.—The applicant (defendant No. 2) was one of two defendants in a suit in the Court of Small Causes in Bombay. He and his co-defendant (defendant No. 1) appointed separate pleaders (K and W) to conduct their case. On the day of hearing the applicant was unavoidably unable to be present, and his pleader (K), being also engaged elsewhere, requested W, the pleader of the other defendant in the suit, to hold his brief and to conduct the case for both defendants. W did so. A decree was passed against both the defendants. The applicant subsequently applied to the Full Court under s. 37 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882) for a new trial on the ground that he had not been represented at the hearing, and that the decree had been passed against him ex-parte. The Full Court refused the application, holding that the applicant had been represented by a pleader, and that the decree against him was not ex-parte. The appellant then applied to the High Court in its extraordinary jurisdiction. Held, discharging the order of the Full Court, that the decree against the applicant was an ex-parte decree. K, who was the applicant's duly appointed pleader, could not delegate his authority to W, and, as the applicant was not himself present, the decree was ex-parte. W was not the duly appointed pleader of the applicant, and could not therefore represent him at the hearing: see s. 39 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

8. ———— Pleaders and their clients, their rights and obligations inter se—Bom. Reg. II of 1827—Confidential communications made in the course of professional employment.—The rules prevailing in England with regard to the rights and obligations of solicitors in relation to their clients apply, with slight difference, to pleaders practising in India. The principles deducible from the English cases are as follows: 1. A party to a judicial proceeding is entitled to such professional assistance as he thinks will best suit him. 2. A pleader is free to place his services at the disposal of any such party upon such terms as he may think most advantageous to himself consistently with the honour of his profession and the due administration of justice. 3. A pleader who receives any confidential information from his client in the course of his professional employment is not at liberty to carry that information into the service of his antagonist, or any one who in that very litigation or in any subsequent litigation may be opposed to the client furnishing the information. 4. Under Regulation II of 1827, pleaders receive certain fees, in return for which they are not at liberty to act against those retaining them, whether they are retained by one client singly or by two or more clients jointly. A pleader who has acted for several persons will not be restrained from afterwards acting for some of them only as against the others, unless it be shown that he is possessed of knowledge arising from his previous employment which might be prejudicial to his other clients. As a general rule, the Court will require a very strong case to be made out before it will interfere by way of injunction, restraining a pleader from appearing for a client, and there must be clear affidavits made to show that special knowledge was acquired by the pleader during his employment by the former client. In case of his possessing such knowledge, he will not be allowed to throw up the conduct of the case and transfer his services. He will never be allowed to discharge himself from the conduct of the case if the case raises even a probability of prejudice to his former employers. K, a pleader, was at first retained by P and N jointly to defend a suit on their behalf. At a later stage of the case, P and N quarrelled. Thereupon K applied to the Court for leave to withdraw from the conduct of the case, on the ground that he could not attend to the interests of both P and N. The Court allowed him to withdraw. A few days afterwards K appeared in Court, and filed a vakalatnama, or warrant or attorney, signed by N, and claimed to conduct the case on behalf of N alone. P objected to this, but the Court disallowed this objection. Thereupon P made an application to the High Court for an injunction restraining K from acting on behalf of N alone. Held that, as it was not made out that K was in possession of any confidential information either from P or from P and N together, such as would give him an unfair advantage when acting on behalf of N, the Court would not interfere or restrain K from serving N alone. Held, further, that a pleader in such circumstances should take the direction of the Court as to which of two or more clients he is to serve, and as to the disposal of the fees he has received from them jointly. *PALLOONI MERWANJI v. 9. ———— Pleader's absence from Court owing to his temporary appointment as a Subordinate Judge—"Necessary cause"—Bom. Reg. II of 1827, s. 54.—On the day fixed for the hearing of a suit, neither the plaintiff nor his pleader was present; the defendant, not having been served, was also absent. Plaintiff's pleader, however, sent intimation to the Court in writing that he had been appointed to act as a Subordinate Judge, and as he was going that day to join his appointment, he was unable to attend the Court. He therefore requested that the case should be adjourned till his return, or that a notice be issued to his client to enable him to make the necessary arrangements for the conduct of his case. Held that the pleader, having been temporarily appointed to act as a Subordinate Judge, was unable to attend the Court in consequence of a "necessary cause" within the meaning of s. 54 of Regulation II of 1827; and as he had sent the necessary notification in writing to the Court, the suit should not be dismissed, but adjourned for a reasonable time. IN RE NARAYAN SADASHIV KALE I. Neither ss. 2 and 36 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) nor ss. 58 and 76 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act (XV of 1882) give the pleaders of the Bombay High Court that right. The provisions of s. 47 of Regulation II of 1827, authorizing persons holding sanads from the High Court to practise in the mofussil Courts, are still in force. PER BAYLEY, WEST, PINNEY, and LATHAM, JJ.—S. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, does not give every pleader a title to appear and plead; it only enacts that "pleader" means every person entitled to appear and plead for another in Court, and includes an advocate, a vakil, and an attorney of a High Court. Consequently, if pleaders or vakils, who are the same class of practitioners, are not entitled by law to appear or plead for another in Court, the definition of "pleader" gives them no new right or status. The words in s. 36 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) "by a pleader duly appointed to act on his behalf," do not simply mean a person duly appointed by the party in the suit, but a pleader duly appointed according to the law regarding pleaders in force in the particular Court. *PER PINNEY, SCOTT, and LATHAM, JJ. 63. Costs between pleader and client—Act I of 1846, s. 6—Quantum meruit.—In a suit brought by R in forma pauperis against the defendant, he had engaged the services of the plaintiff as his pleader, but no express agreement for the remuneration of the plaintiff was made. The suit was numbered, and, after the evidence on either side had been gone into, the trying Court made an order dispaupering R. On an application by R, who offered to pay the Court-fees, the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction made an order directing the lower Court to receive the fees and to proceed with the suit. R paid the fees, but the suit was compromised. The plaintiff did not attend to the suit after remand. The plaintiff having sued the defendant for his fees, the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that one-fourth fee under s. 6 of Act I of 1846 should be awarded to the plaintiff. They do not provide as to matters which relate to the opposite party, or the fees that he has to pay to the legal practitioner of the opposite party, but provide what, as between the pleader and his client, shall be the method in which certain special arrangements are to be entered into. They make provision for arrangements between pleaders and their clients, which relate to the payment of remuneration in excess of and apart from the amount allowed in the taxation, and were framed upon the principle which regards with jealous scrutiny contracts brought about by persons holding positions of active confidence towards others, such as a pleader necessarily occupies in reference to his client. The note was not filed in Court, and it exceeded in amount the vakil's regulation fee. The defendants subsequently made a promissory note in substitution for the above, and the vakil's representatives now brought a suit upon the last-mentioned note. Held (1) that the agreement with the defendants' brother was invalid by reason of the Legal Practitioners Act, s. 28, and the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the amount of the note; (2) that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover in this action the amount due to the vakil independently of that agreement. ANANTAYYA v. II of 1827, s. 52, App. I—Act I of 1846, s. 7—Costs.*—The plaintiff sued for partition and made two widows, who were entitled to maintenance out of the estate, co-defendants in the suit. The plaintiff and the male defendants compromised the suit, and a decree was passed in terms of the compromise. By the compromise the costs of the widows were to be paid by the estate, and in estimating the costs, the lower Court allowed each widow a separate set of costs and calculated the amount to be paid to each as pleader's fees on the value placed on his claim by the plaintiff. On appeal to the High Court, Held that the pleaders of the widows were not employed in prosecuting or defending an original suit of the value of the plaintiff's claim so as to be entitled under s. 52, Bombay Regulation II of 1827, to a percentage on the amount that the plaintiff sued for according to the rates specified in Appendix L. The widows were in reality prosecuting a suit for their maintenance, and their pleaders were entitled to a percentage only on the amount claimed by them for maintenance. Case remanded for the amount of the pleader's fees to be correctly calculated. When a case is decided on the merits, the full percentage is to be paid: in other cases one-fourth only should be paid under s. 7 of Act I of 1846. RAMCHANDRA PARSHA-RAM v. BHAGUBAI. 1 *L. 89. — Unprofessional conduct—Commission to mooktears—Act XX of 1865—Criminal offence.—A, a pleader, was engaged by B, who was acting on behalf of C, to defend certain persons charged with the offences of rioting and of having caused grievous hurt. Two of the accused persons were relatives of C. A agreed with B that, if all the accused were acquitted, his fee was to be Rs 500; if the two who were the relatives of C were acquitted, then he was to receive Rs 250; but in the event of none of the accused being acquitted, he was to receive only Rs 40. Before the trial B paid A Rs 475; this having come to the knowledge of C, he telegraphed, saying that the fee was exorbitant, and A, upon being remonstrated with, handed over Rs 250 to a banker to be placed to his (A's) credit. A alleged that, out of Rs 225 which remained with him, he paid Rs 140 to B as commission, and that Rs 25 were paid to his mohurrir. Held that A was guilty of fraudulent and grossly improper conduct. He was suspended from practising for the period of one year. PER PONTIFEX, J.—If a mooktear, paid for his services by his employer, were to receive in addition, without the knowledge of his employer, a percentage or commission from the pleader, he would be answerable, not only in the Civil Court, but also in the Criminal Court, to a charge of obtaining money improperly from his employer. IN THE MATTER OF PEARY MOHEN GOOHO [11 B. a letter to another vakil of that Court, who practised in District Courts subordinate thereto. The purport of this, which was one of several printed forms prepared for circulation to vakils practising in districts, was to the effect that the vakil, to whom it was addressed, "could easily send his clients' cases, both civil and criminal," to the writer, who would conduct them in that Court. And, "as a remuneration," the fees paid by the clients would be shared between the writer and the vakil who had sent the cases. The Judicial Committee concurred substantially in the conclusions of the High Court that this was an incitement within s. 116 (abatement) of the Penal Code to commit an offence made penal by s. 36 (which was a special law within s. 41 of that Code) of Act XVIII of 1879, the Legal Practitioners' Act. This misconduct had been aggravated by the appellant having denied to the Vakils' Association, North-Western Provinces, and caused evidence to be called to negative, his having signed the printed letter, which he had signed. Thus, there was "reasonable cause" within s. 8 of the Letters Patent of March 17th, 1866, establishing the High Courts, for his suspension, to which, for four years from the date of that Court's order, his punishment was reduced. IN THE MATTER OF PARBATI CHARAN CHATTERJI

2. — Object of pleadings—Issue not in terms framed, but afterwards raised—Appointment of the religious superior of a Mahomedan institution—Custom as to such appointment.—The object of any system of pleading is that each side may be made fully aware of the questions that are about to be argued, in order that each may bring forward evidence appropriate to the issues. The claim here made was that the last preceding sajjadanashin, acting according to the custom of the institution of which he was the religious superior and manager, had appointed the plaintiff to succeed him on his decease. The finding of the first Court that he had this power by the custom was affirmed on this appeal. As to the fact of the appointment, it was not apparent at what stage of the suit the question had first been raised, whether the deceased had been of sound and disposing mind at the time of making it. The first Court found that he had been of sound mind at the time; but the Chief Court on appeal reversed this finding, and added that he had been, in their opinion, unduly influenced. As these questions, though not formally stated in the issues, had been sufficiently open upon the proceedings to give to each Court a right to form a judgment upon them, the Judicial Committee decided which was correct, and affirmed the finding of the first Court as to the soundness of mind of the deceased. *SAYAD MUHAMMAD v. PLEDGOR AND PLEDGEE.

— Pledgee taking over the property pledged, crediting the value as if it had been sold to him—Wrongful conversion—Absence of proof of damages to pledgor—Account—Interest.—Where a pledgee, having power to sell for default, takes over, as if upon a sale to himself, the property pledged without the authority of the pledgor, but crediting its value in account with him, this act, though an unauthorized conversion, does not put an end to the contract of pledge, so as to entitle the pledgor to have the property back without payment. Government paper having been deposited by a borrower from a Bank as security, part was legally sold upon his failing to comply with the terms between them. As to the rest, the borrower, afterwards on redeeming a part, was led to believe that the paper returned was the whole of that which remained unsold in the bank's possession. The bank, however, had taken over part, as if sold to itself, crediting the price. Held that the bank could not after this treat the securities as still subject to the pledge; although this transaction had not put an end to the contract of pledge, so as to entitle the pledgor to have back the paper without payment of the loan and interest. The bank was no longer a pledgee of this paper, but, having converted it to the bank's own use, might have been liable in damages for the value, including the interest thereon. However, had this liability been enforced, the pledgor could not have had credit in the loan account for the proceeds of the paper. The cessation of interest on the loan was more to his advantage than to receive the interest on the paper, the market value of which was also falling, so that the longer the account had been kept open, the greater the balance would have been against the pledgor. It followed that there was no evidence of damage to him resulting from the conversion. The first Court decreed an account, wrongly deciding that interest could not run upon the loan, which the amount of the paper transferred by the bank to itself purported to wipe off, from the date of the transfer. On this point, as well as because there was no proof of damage to the pledgor, the High Court, reversing that decree, had rightly dismissed the pledgor's suit. NECKRAM DOBAY v. BANK OF BENGAL. . I. 8. —Neglect to act on information while on other duty.—A police officer charged under s. 19, Act V of 1861, with a violation of his duties in not acting on information given to him of the likelihood of a breach of the peace, which afterwards actually occurred, set up in defence that he was, when he received the information, engaged bona fide in duties as a police officer in regard to another offence. He was, however, found guilty and convicted. Held the conviction was illegal. For a conviction under s. 29, more than mere neglect of duty must be shown: a deliberate and intentional violation of his duty is necessary. QUEEN v. RADHU SINGH [8 B. L. R., Ap., 60; 17 W. R., Cr., 34

9. —Power to depute subordinate—Police officer—Neglect of duty.—Police officer, being authorized by law to depute his subordinate to proceed to a place where a crime is reported to have been committed, cannot be supposed to have contravened the law by not proceeding to the spot himself; and therefore the conviction of the prisoner on the charge of wilful violation of duty was illegal. GOVERNMENT v. KARAMUT KHAN 1 Agra, Cr., 1

10. —Police constable—"Neglect of duty"—"Lawful order"—Extra drill.—A District Superintendent of Police directed his constables to cut down the jungle in the vicinity of their lines, and on their refusal to comply ordered them extra drill every day. One of such constables not turning out to such extra drill was thereupon prosecuted and convicted of neglect of duty under s. 29, Act V of 1861. Held that s. 29 provided for no such offence, and that any neglect of duty short of a violation of duty does not amount to an offence under that section. Held, further, that the omission to attend such extra drill did not amount to an offence under that section, as the words "lawful order" used in the section mean an order which the authority mentioned therein is competent to make, and it did not appear that a District Superintendent of Police was competent to order his constables to cut down the jungle in the vicinity of their lines, and, on their refusal to do so, to order them extra drill. In THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF BHOLA NATH DAS [I. L. R., 12 Calc., 427]

11. ———— Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 148—Summons cases.—Acts or omissions punishable under Act V of 1861, s. 29, come within the category of "offences punishable under any law other than the Penal Code" (Code of Criminal Procedure, s. 8), and those offences likewise fall within the terms of s. 148 of the same Code. QUEEN v. GOLAM ARABEE . . . 25 W. R., Cr., 20

12. ———— Power to make rules under Act V of 1861—District Superintendent of Police, Power of—A rule or regulation and a lawful order distinguished.—There is no express power given by Act V of 1861 to any officer save the Inspector-General of Police to make rules; therefore the violation of a general rule alleged to have been made by a District Superintendent of Police to the effect that constables are to be within the lines at a particular time or at roll-call is not punishable under s. 29 of the Act. Semble—The violation of a special order made by a District Superintendent of Police requiring the presence of an officer of certain officers within the police lines and issued expressly to him or each of them would come within s. 29 of the Act as being not "a rule or regulation," but a "lawful order" made by a competent authority and relating to the duties of the officer or officers. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF ABDUL HOSSEIN. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ABDUL HOSSEIN [I. L. R., 15 Calc., 194]

13. ———— and s. 8—Police officer—Suspension—Breach of order.—A police constable was suspended and ordered to remain in the lines during suspension. Despite the order, he absented himself therefrom without leave. He was convicted under s. 29 of Act V of 1861. Held s. 29 of Act V of 1861 contemplates that the person to be charged with an offence under it must have been, at the time of his doing the act in respect of which the charge is preferred, a police constable within the meaning of that Act. When a police officer is suspended, he ceases to be a police officer; the conviction was therefore wrong. QUEEN v. DINONATH GANGOOLY, 8 B. L. R., Ap., 58, followed. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. DURGA . . . I. L. 1. ———— s. 34—Police Act Amendment Act (VIII of 1895), s. 18—Slaughter of cow—Open verandah—Annoyance to residents of locality—"Open place," Meaning of—General police.—The slaughtering of a cow in an open verandah, so as to cause annoyance to the residents of the locality, and in spite of their remonstrances, is a breach of the law, being an act in an "open place" within the terms of s. 34 of Act V of 1861 as amended by Act VIII of 1895. The words "open place," coupled with "road, street, or thoroughfare," should not be interpreted ejusdem generis. It seems rather that the addition of these words was intended to have a wider significance, and this is shown by another amendment in the same section made at the same time in which the annoyance, etc., caused must be not to the residents and pas-

1. EVIDENCE OF POSSESSION.

1. ——— Statement as to fact of possible evidence of the fact that such party was in possession. MANIRAM DEB v. DEBI CHARAN DEB

2. ——— Acts of ownership.—A witness's statement that a party "is in possession" is no evidence of the fact. The question of possession is a mixed one of law and fact, and the evidence produced must give the various acts of ownership which go to constitute possession, so that the Court may arrive at its own conclusion. ISHAN

3. ——— Visiting and making use of house—Possession as of right.—Occasionally visiting and making use of a house is ample evidence of possession, unless shown to have been done by the claimant in the capacity of a visitor, and not in his own right. UNUNTO RAM SEAL v. BROJO BULLUS
SEAL

4. ——— Acts of ownership—Omission to show acts of ownership.—In special appeal, the High Court held that evidence which did not allude to any specific acts of ownership was not sufficient evidence to prove possession. The finding of the fact of possession by the lower Appellate Court upon such evidence reversed on special appeal.

7. — Survey proceedings—Survey by revenue authorities—Records in Government maps.—Plaintiff sued in 1876 to recover certain alluvial lands which had been in existence over twelve years, together with recent accretions thereto which, he alleged, appertained to his talukh. The alluvial lands had been surveyed by the revenue authorities in 1868, as appertaining to no permanently-settled estate, and claimed by the Government. The plaintiff's predecessor, however, subsequently in 1874 laid claim to the lands; and the Collector, abandoning the claim of Government, recorded him in the Government maps and papers as proprietor in possession. Held that, although the fact of the land having been measured by the revenue authorities as appurtenant to a certain talukh is prima facie evidence of possession of that land at the time of the survey, no presumption from the survey proceedings could arise in favour of the plaintiff in 1868. *KUSNABUR ROY v. 15. — Dispute as to possession between purchaser from heir and grantees from widows—Effect of decision of Magistrate as to possession.—In a former suit appellant sought as purchaser from the heir to a former proprietor to establish her mukurari right to certain lands as against the grantees from the widows of such proprietor, upon the death of the last surviving widow. She obtained a decree establishing such right, and, on proceeding to take out execution, was opposed by the respondents, who claimed the lands as being a patni tenure which had been sold by auction for arrears of rent due by B S, the former patnidar, and which had been purchased by K B and H B, who had granted a dar-patni of the same to the respondents in 1849. In 1841 there was a proceeding before the Magistrate as between the grantees of the dar-mukurari right under the widows and B S, the patnidar, the result of which investigation was that the Magistrate quitted the former in possession as dar-mukuraridars under the widows, and ordered the patnidar to institute a suit in the Civil Court to enforce his claim, which suit was never brought. The claim of the respondents was tried as a regular suit between the objectors (respondents) as plaintiffs and the decree-holder (appellant) as defendant, and was decided in favour of the respondents in the lower Courts. On appeal to the Privy Council, their Lordships held that the proceeding in 1841 was conclusive of the present case, as showing that the actual possession then was in the grantees of the widows; that it was in the highest degree improbable that they, having established their possessory right against B S, would, without a struggle, have allowed themselves to be

33. ———— Limitation—

Unoccupied and uncultivated land.—Where land, the right to which is disputed, has been uninhabited and uncultivated, and no acts of ownership by any person can be proved to have been exercised over it, it is often necessary, for the purpose of deciding the question of limitation, to rely upon slight evidence of possession, and sometimes possession of the adjoining land, coupled with evidence of title, such as grants of leases; and the Courts are justified in presuming, under such circumstances, that the party who has the title has also the possession. But where the land has been occupied, it is generally proper, for purposes of limitation, to deal with the question of possession as distinct from the question of title; for while the title may be in one person, a twelve years' possession may have barred that title. MOHIMA CHUNDER DEY SIRCAR v. In a suit for possession of property the plaintiff relied on his previous twelve years' possession, and gave no further evidence of his title. Held that a previous possession for twelve years of the property sought to be recovered did not dispense with the necessity which lay on the plaintiff to prove his title to that property. Suit for possession.—Where a plaintiff seeks to recover possession upon a title recently acquired, he is not invariably required to prove the origin of his vendor's title. Proof of long possession.—The plaintiff claimed a right of pre-emption as safee-sharikh, or partner in the thing sold. The Court of first instance gave him a decree on the ground of long possession as proprietor. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decision on the ground that the plaintiff's title depended on a deed of purchase, which it was admitted had been set aside in a former suit in 1855, and that the plaintiff had failed to show that the decision in that suit had been reversed. The plaintiff proved that he had preferred an appeal from that decision, and alleged that it had been overruled; but there was no proof of the result of the appeal, as the records of that suit had been burnt in the Mutiny. Held on appeal to the High Court that, under the circumstances, proof of long possession as proprietor was sufficient. TUFANI SINGH v. the village of Shirasgam in the Puna Collectorate, commonly called "Kholhati Bawas Inam," originally belonged to His Highness Scindia. Plaintiff's family were proved to have been in actual possession of them from 1841 to 1851, and in constructive possession during their attachment by the Inam Commission from 1854 to 1863, when by a mistake in carrying out the orders of the British Government, the lands passed into the possession of Scindia, and remained with His Highness till 1872, in which year the British Government, by exchange of lands, came into possession. In a suit brought on 29th July 1872, Held that the plaintiff's possession, not extending over thirty years, gave him no proprietary title under s. 1 of Regulation V of 1827, which, as a law of positive prescription, was not repealed by Act XIV of 1859. Under the former Limitation Act, twelve years' adverse possession barred the suit without extinguishing the title: so that, if a proprietor who had been out of possession for more than twelve years happened to regain it, the person who had been in adverse possession must fail in any suit to eject the proprietor, unless he sued within six months under s. 15 of the Act. The effect of Act IX of 1871, s. 29, however, is not merely to bar the remedy, but to extinguish the title of the original proprietor after twelve years of a possession adverse to him. RAMBHAT AGNIHOTRI v. under a pottah which had been granted to their ancestor in 1733 by the then talukhdars in respect of certain services to be performed by the grantees and their descendants. The Court of first instance found that the pottah was genuine, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge found that the pottah was a forgery; and that, although the lands had been granted to the defendants' ancestor in respect of services, yet the plaintiff was entitled to khas possession, as he did not require the services to be performed. He therefore decreed the plaintiff's claim. Held that the decree was right, for having found that the pottah on which the defendants chiefly relied was a forgery, the Subordinate Judge was not bound, as a matter of law, to presume that the tenure was a permanent one merely from the fact of long possession of the lands. NOBIN CHUNDER DUTT v. Finding by Mamlatdar as to possession—Subsequent contrary finding by Civil Court—Onus of proof.—The plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession of certain land which had belonged to her nephew, and of which, after his death in 1878, she had assumed the management. In 1881 she brought a possessory suit against the first defendant in the Mamlatdar's Court, which suit was dismissed in January 1885, the Mamlatdar holding that she had not been in possession. In a civil suit, however, which (pending the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court) she had filed against the first defendant in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Haveri, the Judge found that she had been in possession since 1880, and awarded her damages against the first defendant (who was held to be her farm servant) for crops which had been taken away by him. In 1897 the second defendant as mortgagee from defendant No. 1 obtained a decree against plaintiff in the Mamlatdar's Court awarding him possession of the land, and in execution of that decree the plaintiff was dispossessed in December 1887. In 1890 the plaintiff filed this suit to recover possession and for mesne profits since 1887. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had no title to the land, and that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as the plaintiff had not brought a suit to establish her right within three years after the Mamlatdar's order in 1885 dismissing her possessory suit. Held that the plaintiff's possession prior to 1887, confirmed as it was by the decree of the Civil Court in 1885 and by the finding of the lower Court of appeal in the present case, must prevail against the defendant, who claimed through plaintiff's farm servant only, and whose possession commenced with the disturbance

54. Possession under deed afterwards set aside as fraudulent—Effect of decree setting it aside.—Where a person was in actual possession of property from the time when a deed conveyed it to him, a decision which declared that deed to be fraudulent did not have the effect of putting another claimant in possession; nor could possession be considered as having ceased in consequence of the decree, unless the holder were actually dispossessed under it; for the fact of the decree did not prevent the statute of limitation from running, and, in the particular case under consideration, the decree in question was still under appeal. MUKBOOL ALI v. WAJED HOSSEIN 25 W. R., 249

55. Possession in execution of decree—Possession otherwise than by Court—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 230, 264.—Act VIII of 1859, s. 230, did not limit the applicant to any particular manner of obtaining possession; and s. 264 contained nothing to prevent the purchaser at an execution sale from obtaining possession if he could without the assistance of the Court. OBHOYA CHURN DEY v. RAJENDRO COOMAR GHOSH [22 W. R., 406]

56. Possession without executing decree for possession.—So long as a plaintiff obtains possession after a decree establishing his right to it, it is immaterial for the purpose of limitation whether he obtained it by executing his decree, or whether possession was yielded to him. If afterwards dispossessed, his cause of action does not date from the decree, but from his dispossession. SALIG RAM v. MEHEEN LALL 2 Agra, 235

58. Decree for possession. Non-execution of—Title—Possession taken by rightful owner without Court's intervention—Trespass—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 9.—B purchased land from M and subsequently brought a suit against M to obtain possession. He got a decree, but did not execute it within three years. M died, and after his death and while his daughter (the plaintiff) was a minor, B took forcible possession of the land. Eight years afterwards the plaintiff attained her majority, and she then filed this suit to recover the land. The lower Court held that B, having failed to execute his decree for possession, was wrong in taking possession during the minority of the plaintiff without the intervention of a Court; that in so doing he was a trespasser; and that the plaintiff as M's heir was entitled to have possession given to her, until ousted in due course of law. Held (reversing the decree) that, subject to the provision of s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), there is no reason for holding that in India the rightful owner dispossessing another is a trespasser, and may not rely for the support of his possession on the title vested in him, as he clearly may do by English law. BANDU v. NABA [I L R., 15 Bom., 238]

59. Possession in execution of decree—Proclamation of sale—S. 3 for possession—Limitation.—In a suit for possession of certain lands purchased by plaintiff at a sale in execution of a decree of the Sudder Ameen's Court, the lower Court held that "possession by proclamation of sale, through the Sudder Ameen's Court, was possession through the Court," and that the suit, being brought within twelve years of that proclamation, was in time. Held on appeal that such imaginary possession was no possession at all, and that the suit was barred by limitation. JOWHER ALY v. RAM CHAND [2 B. L. R., Ap., 29: 24 W. R., 419]

60. Proclamation of sale—Possession of auction-purchaser.—The possession of an auction-purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree runs from the date of delivery, as provided by s. 246, Act VIII of 1859, i.e., by publication of sale certificate and proclamation by beat of drum, and not from the date of his possession. ASUDOLAH v. 69. Formal possession—Transfer of possession—Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), ss. 223, 224.—In a suit for possession, it appeared that in 1863 the plaintiff had sued some of the present defendants for khas possession of the same land. In that suit the defendants pleaded that they were tenants of the plaintiff and entitled to hold under a pottah, which they failed to prove, and the plaintiff obtained a decree. Three years afterwards the plaintiff was put into formal possession by the Court under s. 224 of Act VIII of 1859, instead of under s. 223. Held that, as the plaintiff was put in possession under his decree by the officer of the Court, the form in which execution was given was immaterial. The formal possession given by a Civil Court under an execution operates, in point of law and fact, as between the parties, as a complete transfer of possession from the one party to the other. LOKESURE KORE v. OBHOY NEND ROY. I. L. R., 5 Cal., 381

71. Symbolical possession—Limitation—Fresh cause of action.—Symbolical possession given under a decree does not, as against third parties, entitle the person to whom such possession has been given to count a fresh period of limitation from the date of the possession. A person who prefers a claim to property attached under a decree, but whose claim is disallowed, is not a party to the decree; and the decree-holder, on obtaining symbolical possession, will not be entitled to count a fresh period of limitation as against him. *DOYANDHI PANDA v. In 1869 B died and K's name was recorded in the revenue registers in the place of B's name in respect of the estate. In 1870 K died, and her daughter S applied to have her name recorded in the revenue registers in respect of the estate. M, the illegitimate son of B, objected, claiming to have his name recorded. His objection having been disallowed and S's name having been recorded, M in 1870 sued S for a declaration of his proprietary right to the estate, and on the 24th July 1878 obtained such declaration. In January 1880 M sold a moiety of the estate, and in December 1880 S sold the entire estate. plaintiff was the hereditary manager of the temple of Shri Ranchord Rajji at Dakor. The defendants were the shevaks or ministers of the deity. The plaintiff sued to oust the defendants from a certain piece of land attached to the temple, alleging that the defendants had erected shops on the land, and appropriated the rents to their own use, although it had been already decided in a suit between the parties that the land was always to be kept open and unoccupied for the use of the temple. The shevaks contended that they had been in exclusive and uninterrupted possession of the land in dispute for more than twelve years, and that by reason of such user they had acquired a quasi-proprietary title at least as against the manager of the temple. They therefore pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation. Held that the defendants had not by occupation and user acquired any title as against the plaintiff who was the manager of the temple estate. They had come into occupation originally as servants and representatives of the deity, and during their occupation they could not by a wish change the nature of their possession. Both they and the plaintiff held the land for the same deity, and their rights could not be adverse to each other so as to give rise to a title by prescription. The only question then was as to which of them was the proper representative of the deity for the particular purpose of this suit, and that question had already been decided in a former suit in favour of the plaintiff. MULJI BHULABHAI v. 115. ——— Possession by one member of family—Neglect by plaintiff to take possession of his share notwithstanding request that he would do so—Limitation.—The plaintiff and the defendant were brothers and members of an undivided family. The plaintiff was in Government service, and had been for a long time absent from his native place on duty, the family property remaining under the management of the defendant. In 1863 the defendant wrote to the plaintiff, requesting him to return and manage his share of the property, or to employ some one to manage it for him. Nothing, however, was done by the plaintiff in the matter, and the defendant continued in possession. In 1882 the plaintiff sued the defendant for partition. The defendant pleaded that the suit was barred, contending that he had been in adverse possession from the date of the letter. The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff's claim. The defendant appealed, and the lower Appellate Court reversed the lower Court's decree, holding that the suit was barred. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court.—Held that the suit was not barred. The above-mentioned letter of the defendant showed that, up to the date at which it was written, the defendant had not been in possession of the property "as his own property to the exclusion of the plaintiff, and the mere circumstance that subsequently to the date of the letter the plaintiff had not participated in the profits would not, in the absence of other evidence, justify the inference that the plaintiff was then excluded. DINKAR SADASHIV v. plaintiff was the hereditary manager of the temple of Shri Ranchord Baiji at Dakor. The defendants were the shevaks or ministers of the deity. The plaintiff sued to oust the defendants from a certain piece of land attached to the temple, alleging that the defendants had erected shops on the land, and appropriated the rents to their own use, although it had been already decided in a suit between the parties that the land was always to be kept open and unoccupied for the use of the temple. The shevaks contended that they had been in exclusive and uninterrupted possession of the land in dispute for more than twelve years, and that by reason of such user they had acquired a quasi-proprietary title at least as against the manager of the temple. They therefore pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation. Held that the defendants had not by occupation and user acquired any title as against the plaintiff who was the manager of the temple estate. They had come into occupation originally as servants and representatives of the deity, and during their occupation they could not by a wish change the nature of their possession. Both they and the plaintiff held the land for the same deity, and their rights could not be adverse to each other so as to give rise to a title by prescription. The only question then was as to which of them was the proper representative of the deity for the particular purpose of this suit, and that question had already been decided in a former suit in favour of the plaintiff. MULJI BHULABHAI v. dispute. He sold it to G, who sold it to the plaintiff. A, however, continued in occupation of the property. In 1879 the plaintiff sued A and G for possession and obtained a decree. On the 6th April 1880, in execution of the decree, he was put in formal possession by the Court under s. 63 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) in the presence of A, who made no objection. At the time of these proceedings A's sons (the present defendants) were living with him in the house; and they continued to do so subsequently. A died in 1885, and his sons continued in possession of the property and cultivated it. On the 4th April 1892 the plaintiff brought this suit to eject them. They pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation, contending that the execution proceedings in 1880 did not bind them, as they were not parties to that suit. Held that, as the present suit would not have been barred against A had he survived, it was not barred against the defendants, whose rights were derived from him. The defendants living with their father had no independent juridical possession of the premises. The father A was the only person in possession. The possession which the plaintiff obtained through the Court from A in 1880 operated as well against the defendants (A's sons) as against A himself. PANDHARINATH v. MAHABUKAN [I. L. 117. — Limitation—
Possession under gift making valid title.—Of two brothers of a Mitakshara family, the younger who had been born deaf and dumb was disqualified from inheriting, but the action of the elder to the younger was such as to recognise for some years that the younger had a joint interest in the family property, although it was found that there was no intention shown by the acts of the elder brother to waive the rights accruing to him in consequence of his brother's disqualification. The brothers died and also a daughter of the elder brother, who was their only descendant. This daughter had an only son, who died before her, after taking, however, the whole family estate under a gift made to him with his mother's assent by his maternal grandfather in 1867. In 1882 the plaintiff, a collateral relation, sued the widow of the donee to obtain the estate of the younger of the brothers. The widow made title under the gift to her deceased husband, followed by his possession, and hers afterwards, since the date of the gift. Upon the facts found, the suit was held to be barred by limitation. LALA MUDDUN GOPAL LAL v. KHAKHINDA KORB

In March 1876, less than twelve years from the expiration of such lease, the plaintiffs brought a suit for possession against B and the talukhdars of the estate of which the lands in dispute formed part. The latter alleged that the lakhiraj title of the plaintiff was invalid; that although no proceedings, as required by the Rent law, had been taken to invalidate the plaintiff's title, they, the talukhdars, had resumed possession of the land by receiving the rents from B from 1859; and that the suit was barred by reason of their possession since that date. Held that the suit was not barred, inasmuch as nothing had occurred to determine the tenancy which existed between the plaintiff and B, and that the possession of the latter was in law the plaintiff's possession. *PARBUTTI DASI v. Nine years afterwards, and without any demand having been made by B, K died, and his heirs continued to occupy the house apparently on the same terms as K had done. In a suit brought by B against the heirs of K to recover possession of the house,—Held that K occupied the house as tenant-at-will of B; that such tenancy was, on the death of K, as of course, converted into an adverse occupation by the heirs of K, in the absence of proof of the intention of the parties to that effect, and in the absence of anything to show that B did not assent to the heirs of K continuing to hold on the same terms as K had done. RADHABHAI v. In 1888 the landlord sued to eject the defendants. The defence was that the suit was barred by limitation. Held that the suit was not barred. After B's death, the defendants, though not in possession as tenants, were not trespassers. A partial interest in land may be lost by adverse possession as well as the whole interest, and the right to such partial interest may be asserted by suit. So, where a landlord seeks to recover from his tenant possession of land in his tenant's occupancy, and the latter alleging a perpetual tenancy successfully resists on that ground the landlord's attempt to dispossess him, the tenant may, after the statutory period has expired, plead limitation in bar of a subsequent suit in ejectment by the landlord. A landlord allowing the tenant to assert the validity of an invalid lease for the statutory period of more than twelve years may be debarred from subsequently questioning the right of the tenant to hold under its terms. BUDRASAB v. In the year 1882 the Collector declared the alienation to be illegal, and in the year 1883 ordered that the plaintiff should be reinstated in the possession of his share. At plaintiff's request, his share was given into the possession of the defendant, who was the plaintiff's brother and khatedar of the entire bhag. In the year 1882 the plaintiff brought this suit against the defendant to recover possession of his share. The defendant contended that the suit was time-barred, the plaintiff not having been in possession since the year 1871. Held that the suit was not barred, the possession of plaintiff's alienee being the possession of the plaintiff himself, and the defendant not being entitled to tack to the period of his own possession that of the plaintiff's alienee. MAHAMAD DASU v. By the regulations the Government declared that, as regards the estates that came within the scope of the permanent settlement, it withdrew its sovereign right to vary the assessments; beyond that they did not go; they do not constitute a contractual relationship between the Government and the owners of permanently-settled estates, or any relationship as would debar Government from claiming and exercising against those owners the rights of an ordinary proprietor. Although therefore Government continues to receive the full revenue from the proprietor of a permanently-settled estate for the entire estate, the former is not precluded from claiming title by adverse possession in respect of any portion thereof. When a person is let into possession of a particular property by another claiming it to be his own, the former cannot contend, after the expiration of his tenancy, that the latter (i.e., the person alleging himself to be the owner) cannot acquire an adverse title against him as well as others by efflux of time. *Kally Churn Sahoo v. 135. ——— Effect of service tenure—Non performance of service.—Where lands are held as remuneration for services, the fact that no services have been performed does not of itself make the holding adverse. To make the holding adverse, there must be a refusal to perform service or a claim to hold the lands free of service. KOMARGOWDA v. BHIMAJI KESHAV. I. L. R., 23 Bom., 602

136. ——— Possession after redemption by one of several mortgagors—Mortgage—Suit for redemption or recovery of property on payment of a charge—Limitation.—The plaintiff sought to recover his father's share in two portions of family property, one of which had been mortgaged by the plaintiff's father and the father of the defendant No. 1 jointly; the other had been mortgaged by the plaintiff's father jointly with the father of defendant No. 1 and the husband of defendant No. 2. The first was redeemed by the father of defendant No. 1 alone in 1868; the second was redeemed by the defendant No. 1 more than twelve years before the suit. The parties were Mahomedans, and the plaintiff had a brother and three sisters only, one of whom (defendant No. 2) was a party to the suit. Defendant No. 1 contended that the suit was defective for want of parties, and that it was time barred. Held that the plaintiff's brothers and sisters ought to have been joined as co-plaintiffs, the defendant No. 1's possession after redemption not being adverse to them. If it was adverse at all, it was adverse to the whole of the plaintiff's branch of the family, so as to bar the right of the group altogether. But that was no reason why the co-owners should not be admitted as co-plaintiffs, and the suit go on upon its merits. BHAUDIN v. ISMAIL. [I. L. R., 11 Bom., 425]

137. ——— Purchase by mortgagee of share in mortgaged property—Limitation—Mortgages.—A mortgagee of an entire undivided estate does not, by a subsequent purchase of a certain share therein from one not in actual possession at the time of conveyance, thereby change his character from a mortgagee to that of an owner, but his possession continues as a mortgagee. B held an entire undivided estate under a mortgage (usufructuary) from C since 1273 (1866), and as such mortgagee in 1282 (1875) B purchased a share therein from D, who had not been in actual possession since the date of the mortgage. On the 20th January 1885 B brought a suit to recover possession of his purchased share. Held that the subsequent purchase did not change the character of B from that of a mortgagee to that of an owner, and that his suit was barred by twelve years' limitation. NUNDO LAL ADDY v. JODU NATH HALDAR

138. ——— Denial by mortgagee in possession of mortgagor's right to redeem.—Denial by a mortgagee in possession of the mortgagor's right to redeem is not sufficient to convert such possession into adverse possession. MUSSAD v. COLLECTOR OF MALABAR. I. L. R., 10 Mad., 189

139. ——— Possession of one co-sharer when adverse—Limitation—Co sharer—Mortgage—Mortgage by three co-sharers—Redemption by one of several mortgagors—Right of the other mortgagors to sue for redemption—Period of limitation for such suit.—In 1847 the property in dispute was mortgaged by three co-sharers, D, A, and R. In 1859 R alone redeemed the property, and mortgaged it again to a third person. In 1882 the heirs of D and A brought a suit to redeem the whole of the property, or their portions of it. The defence to the suit was that it was barred by limitation, being brought more than twelve years after R had redeemed the property, and R's possession subsequently to such redemption having been adverse to the plaintiffs and their predecessors in title.—Held that the suit was not barred by limitation. When R redeemed the property, he held it, as regards his co-sharers' interests in it, as a lienor, and as such his possession was not adverse to them. It did not contradict, but rather implied and preserved their ultimate proprietary right. In the case of a co-sharer holding after redemption, limitation is computed only from the date when the possession becomes adverse by the assertion of an exclusive title and submission to the right thus set up, in analogy to the provision which bars an excluded sharer generally after the lapse of twelve years from the time when he becomes aware of his exclusion. As long as possession can be referred to a right consistent with the subsistence of an ownership in being at its commencement, so long must the possession be referred to that right, rather than to a right which contradicts the ownership. RAMCHANDRA YASHVANT SIRPOTDAR v. SADASHIV ABRAJ SIRPOTDAR. I. L. R., 11 Bom., 422

140. ——— Equity of redemption—Mortgage—Limitation.—In 1845 the plaintiff's grandfather A mortgaged the house in dispute to D with possession. A died in 1849, leaving him surviving his daughter K (the plaintiff's mother) and a daughter-in-law N, the widow of his predeceased adopted son. In 1856 the mortgagee D brought a suit on his mortgage against N and obtained a decree against her, directing (inter alia) a sale of the house in the event of the non-payment of the mortgage-debt. N in consequence sold the house in the same year (1856) to E, and paid off the mortgage, who thereupon at her instance gave up the house to R. He held possession from 1856 to 1884. In 1881 the defendant P obtained a decree against E for Rs. 2,000. In execution of this decree, the house was sold, and P bought it himself and obtained possession on 17th January 1884. While that suit was pending, the plaintiff T, the grandson of A, brought a suit (No. 247 of 1881) against the son of D (the original mortgagee) and R to redeem the mortgage of 1845 and recover possession. The plaintiff obtained a decree against D's son for redemption, and proceeded to execute the decree. He was obstructed by R's son, who, however, in a suit (No. 205 of 1882) was found to have no right to the house. The present suit was brought in 1884 by the plaintiff to recover the house from the defendant. Held that the suit was barred. The defendant in 1884 purchased the house from R, who had bought it in 1856 from N. R's possession since that time had been adverse to the plaintiff. There can be adverse possession of the equity of redemption, and N's possession had been adverse up to the sale in 1856. PUTTAPPA v. TIMMAJI. I. L. R., 14 Bom., 176

141. ——— One of several co-mortgagees obtaining possession of the whole property—Usufructuary mortgage satisfied out of usufruct—Limitation.—In the case of a usufructuary mortgage by several co-mortgagors when such mortgage is satisfied out of the usufruct, each co-mortgagor is not entitled to recover possession of more than his share of the mortgaged property. Consequently where in such a case one of several co-mortgagors gets possession of the whole of the mortgaged property, he does not occupy the position of a mortgagee to his co-mortgagors, but his possession is adverse to them. Fakir Bukhsh v. 142. ——— Possession of usufructuary mortgagees—Burden of proof.—The possession of a usufructuary mortgagee being the possession of all the persons who have the right of redemption, that is, of all the persons entitled to the estate, it is only when after redemption possession is taken by some of the persons so entitled that their possession can become adverse as against the others. In a suit for possession of immoveable property it is for the plaintiff to show by some prima facie evidence that he has a subsisting title not extinguished by the operation of limitation before the defendant can be called upon to substantiate a plea of adverse possession. Parmanand Misr v. to be out of possession.—In a suit, in form, for confirmation of possession, it was alleged that the Collector had refused to register the plaintiff's name in respect of the property claimed, but had registered the defendant's name. The plaintiff having been found to be out of possession, the lower Court dismissed the suit. The plaint bore a stamp sufficient to cover a suit for recovery of possession. Held that, inasmuch as the effect of the refusal of the Collector to register the plaintiff's name under s. 78 of the Land Registration Act (Bengal Act VII of 1876) was to prevent the plaintiff recovering the rent of the estate, and that such refusal was alleged in the plaint, the suit might be taken to be in substance a suit for recovery of possession, and ought not to have been dismissed. *Amir Hossein v. 159. ———— Suit for declaration of right—Right to possession—Right of person with good title ousted by person who had none.—Plaintiff sued to establish his right to a dharmakartaship and to the hereditary office of pooja stanika in a pagoda. He alleged that he held the office of pooja stanika hereditarily, and that the dharmakartaship was assigned to him by the original dharmakartas by deed (No. I), but that he was afterwards forcibly dispossessed by defendants. Defendants denied plaintiff's hereditary right to the office of pooja stanika, and declared that he was removed from the dharmakartaship for neglecting his duties, and that they were appointed instead (by document No. IV). The District Judge gave judgment in favour of plaintiff. The defendants appealed. An issue was sent to the lower Court whether, assuming exhibit I to be revocable, did the persons who executed exhibit IV constitute the collective body entitled to revoke it. The lower Court found this issue in the negative. Held (by the High Court) that this was not properly a suit for a declaration. The object of the suit and the effect of the declaration would have been to put the plaintiff in possession of that from which he had been ousted; that as to the claim to the dharmakartaship, document I showed that the plaintiff was a mere appointee as agent, and that, as the authority given by it was not revoked by IV, the case was that of one ousted from a possession which he held upon a good title by those who had shown none; that on the principle of such cases as *Asher v. in which the plaintiff claimed alluvial land in the possession of the Government as being his by right of accretion to his own estate, though the churs had re-formed on the original sites of lands belonging to other persons.—Held that the case could not be decided on the principle that, inasmuch as those other parties were not before the Court, the plaintiff had the better title as between himself and Government. the sale, certain lands reclaimed from the bil were for some years held by B as part of his purchased zamindari. A instituted a summary suit under Act IV of 1840, and was by an order of the Magistrate put in possession of these lands. B brought a regular suit against A to recover the lands and set aside his order. Held (reversing the decisions of the Courts below) that it was necessary for B to show a better title to the land than A could produce. It was not enough for him to prove possession anterior to the Magistrate's order under Act IV of 1840. The presumption was that the land of the bil belonged to A, who had admittedly owned both estates before, and had retained the fisheries of the bil after the auction sale. B ought to have shown when and how, if at all, the right to the fisheries and the right to the soil were severed. *BARADA KANT ROY v. 2. — Dispute as to right to collect rents—Order of Criminal Court as to—Report of police officer.—Where a dispute between parties was not concerning land or its boundaries, or concerning houses, water, fisheries, or produce of land, but simply as to what collections one of the parties had made and what rents he was entitled to collect under a decree of Court, the case was held not to come under the provisions of Act X of 1873, s. 53, but under the ruling in *Ramrunjines Doss v. 5. — Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1892), s. 145—Tangible immovable property.—A dispute as to the right to collect rents is a dispute concerning tangible immovable property within the meaning of s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. *Harak Narain Singh v. Where a dispute arose as to the right to collect the rents of certain land, the ownership of which was claimed by both A and B, and the tenants who had been paying rent to A refused to pay rent to A and returned to B.—Held that the conduct of the tenants in attorning to B was not an assertion of possession adverse to A such as to put an end to the relation of landlord and tenant between them and A and to A's right to collect the rents. Such attornment therefore did not deprive A of his right to have recourse to s. 145 in case of a likelihood of a breach of the peace, so as to have his possession of the right to collect the rents maintained pending proceedings in a civil suit. *SARABANDA BASU MOSUMDAR v. 8. — Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 145—Tangible immovable property.—A dispute as to the right to collect rents is a dispute concerning tangible immovable property within the meaning of s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the operation of that section cannot be limited by any rule which would depend upon the area of the property in dispute. Where, in such a dispute which related to two pergunnahs comprising more than three hundred distinct villages, it was admitted by the petitioner that the opposite party had been in possession by receipt of rent from the tenants up to a period some three months anterior to the institution of the proceeding, but she alleged that she had succeeded in inducing the tenants to attorn to her by payment of rent to the officers appointed by her since such period; and where the Deputy Commissioner, after recording a certain amount of evidence, refused to examine any more witnesses on the ground that the enquiry would extend to an inordinate length and be extremely expensive, and passed an order under the section,—Held that, even though it might be established that the Deputy Commissioner's action in excluding evidence was illegal, it did not follow, having regard to the circumstances of the case, that the High Court would be justified in exercising its revisional powers. Held further that a payment of rent for a short time to the petitioner, even if proved, would not amount to dispossession of the opposite party. *Sarabanda Basu Mosumdar v. It is a proper case to be dealt with under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) where the subject-matter of dispute is a ferry, including the land and water upon which the right of ferry is exercised. *HARBULUHN NARAIN SINGH v. is, acts which are punishable by law, and a case under s. 145 is not a case relating to an offence. HARBULUHN NARAIN SINGH v. BAJRANG DASS [3 C. W. N., 148]

14. ——— Dispute as to alluvial land—Land left by drying up of river.—A Magistrate had jurisdiction, under s. 818, Code of Criminal Procedure, 1861, to prevent breaches of the pance in places where the rivers have dried up. The jurisdiction that was once there, under s. 80, was not taken away by reason of the land having appeared, and the water disappeared. KMAMBADEEN BEGUM v. TEK BAHADUR DOOR 17 W. R., Cr., 53

16. ——— Dispute about right to perform service in a public temple—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 144, 145.—A dispute relating to the right of performing religious service in a public temple when it is likely to cause a breach of the public peace falls under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898). Muhammad Musaliar v. Kunji Chak Musaliar, I. L. R., 11 Mad., 328, referred to. A dispute arose between certain classes of priests attached to a Hindu temple about the right of performing a certain religious service. On the complaint of one of the parties, the Magistrate of the district, purporting to act under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1898), passed an ex parte order prohibiting the other party from taking any part in the said service, although both parties had been previously declared by the Civil Court to be entitled to officiate at the service. Held that the order was illegal and opposed to the provisions of s. 145 of the Code. The High Court ordinarily has no jurisdiction to interfere with an order under Ch. XII of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), which is not a proceeding within the meaning of s. 435 of the Code; but when the Magistrate exceeds his jurisdiction under s. 144 or 145, the High Court has power to interfere under its revisional jurisdiction (s. 439). IN RE PANDURANG GOVIND [I. 18. — Dispute as to a number of plots of land governed by same circumstances—Action of Magistrate only as regards same plots—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 530.—A dispute having arisen as to the possession of 109 plots of land to which a claim to possession was made by the raiyats of village A on the one hand and by the raiyats of village B on the other, the Magistrate instituted a proceeding under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code in respect of all the 109 plots, but, having taken evidence, dealt in his order with twelve only, directing that the raiyats of village B should be kept in possession. Held that, it appearing that all the 109 plots were covered by the same state of circumstances, the Magistrate had exercised a sound discretion in acting as he did. 19. — Dispute as to property of which each of two persons claimed the whole without allegation of joint possession—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 530.—Where each of two parties claimed the same share of certain property as a whole estate, neither alleging that the other was joint with him in any way, and the Magistrate, without reference to the right of possession, went into the question of who was in possession, and maintained the possession of the party found in possession, the High Court held that the case fell under Act X of 1872, s. 530, and saw no necessity to interfere with the decision. 20. — Dispute regarding joint property—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 318.—The decision of the Deputy Magistrate was quashed, because the property in dispute being ijmalī he had no jurisdiction to try the dispute under s. 318, Code of Criminal Procedure, but ought to have proceeded in the manner laid down in Circular Order No. 10, dated 16th April 1863. S. 145 of the Code contemplates a dispute between two parties each of which asserts the right to hold actual possession of property as against the other and not a dispute between a party claiming to hold joint possession and another contesting such right. 23. — Land held by co-sharers—Dispute on erection of edifice by one without consent of other—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 530.—A, a joint owner of a parcel of land, erected on it an edifice without the consent and against the will of B, another joint owner. A dispute having arisen in consequence, the Magistrate held an inquiry, and made an order under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code, awarding to A exclusive possession of the part of the land on which the edifice had been erected. Held per JACKSON, J., that such order was erroneous, as the matter was not one to which s. 530 could apply. 24. — Dispute as to building site—Persons not parties to proceedings—Criminal Procedure Code, 1892, ss. 145, 147.—In a suit to recover a building site, an injunction was issued by the Court restraining the defendants from building on the land pending the decision of the suit. On appeal, the injunction was dissolved on the ground that the defendant was in possession. Subsequent to this order, the District Magistrate, on the complaint of the plaintiff against the defendant, passed an order under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, declaring that K and V were in possession, and forbidding all disturbance of their possession until the decision of a Civil Court. Held that, K and V not being parties to the proceedings, the order was illegal. Held also that, if a breach of the peace appeared likely to occur, the proper course was for the Magistrate to take security from the party from whom a breach of the peace was apprehended, but that it was not illegal for the Magistrate to proceed under s. 145 or s. 147 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. the proper course for him was to try the complaint of the offences charged, and in the event of the complainant establishing his case, sufficient to secure the conviction of the accused of an offence attended by criminal force, the Magistrate could, under s. 522 of the Code, order the restoration of the land to the complainant. *KESU alias KESHWAR SINGH v. 38. ————— Police report setting out probability of breach of peace.—Semble.—That a reference by a Magistrate to a police report which clearly sets out the probability of a breach of the peace is a sufficient statement of the reasons for the Magistrate's being satisfied of the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, within the meaning of s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882. GOLVOK CHUNDER PAL v. The provisions of s. 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure were held to be substantially complied with when the Magistrate stated that he was satisfied that the disputes between the parties were likely to induce a breach of the peace, and recorded his opinion that the only way of bringing those disputes to a satisfactory settlement was by proceeding under the section quoted. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF BISSESHUR NARAIN MAHTAH . . . 3 W. 42. Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 145—Breach of the peace—Police report—Duties of Magistrate acting under s. 145—Record of grounds.—Before instituting proceeding under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Magistrate is bound to satisfy himself, on grounds which are reasonable, that a breach of the peace is imminent in regard to properties of the description specified in that section, and that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning them; and the grounds stated by him must be such as to satisfy a Court of revision before which such case may be brought by any of the parties concerned. Where a Magistrate, in consequence of the institution of various cases relating to breaches of the peace between the partizans of two rival zamindars, had directed the police to enquire and report whether there were sufficient grounds for proceeding under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and having received a report which both suggested the necessity for such proceedings and set forth substantial reasons in support of the suggestion, made such report the foundation for the proceedings which he instituted, it was contended, among other things, that the Magistrate had not complied with the provisions of the Code in omitting to state the grounds of his being so satisfied of the imminence of a breach of the peace. Held that, inasmuch as the police report contained abundant evidence of the likelihood of a breach of the peace, it was sufficient, for the purpose of notice to the parties, for the Magistrate to cite it as the ground of his proceeding on which he was satisfied that a dispute within the terms of s. 145 existed, and that it would be open to the parties during the proceedings, if they disputed the necessity for them, to show before the Magistrate that no such dispute existed, or, if so advised, to move the Court of revision to set aside the proceedings, on the ground that the Magistrate had proceeded on grounds which were not reasonable or which could not be held to be sufficient to satisfy him that such a dispute existed. DEANPUT SINGH v. Before taking action, the Magistrate is bound to be satisfied from a police report or other information on this point, and he is also bound to make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being so satisfied.

and this must be served on the parties to the dispute; for it is the intention of the law, not only that Magistrates should have sufficient grounds for proceeding under s. 145, but that they should inform the parties concerned of the grounds on which they are proceeding. A Sessions Judge is not competent to order a Magistrate to take action under s. 145. He should rather draw his attention to the nature of the dispute in the trial before him, so that the Magistrate may exercise his own discretion as to the necessity of proceedings. Proceedings so initiated, when there is nothing in the police report or elsewhere to justify them, would be void, and s. 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code would have no application. *Gour Mohan Majee v. A Magistrate proceeding under this section must himself be satisfied by a police report or other information that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace, and he has a discretion as to whether to institute proceedings or not. *Queen-Empress v. 47. ———— Order instituting proceedings under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1898)—Contents of such order—Irregularity in order, making proceedings without jurisdiction.—Unless a Magistrate complies strictly with the terms of s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by stating in his written order all the particulars necessary to enable him to act under that section, his proceedings are without jurisdiction. It is not sufficient that the Magistrate should have before him a police report, and that he should have given orders thereon that a written order be drawn up within the terms of s. 145. It is his duty to draw up, or have drawn up, an order which in all respects satisfies the requirements of the law. It is absolutely necessary that the written order should be correct and complete in its terms. MOHESH SOWAR v. NARAIN BAG . . . I. L. R., 27 Calc., 361

3. PARTIES TO PROCEEDINGS.

48. ———— Parties claiming to be in possession of land, the subject of dispute, Right of, to appear in proceedings—Criminal Procedure Code, s. 145.—Before taking action under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Magistrate is bound to be satisfied from a police report or other information as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace, and he is also bound to make an order in writing, stating the grounds of his being so satisfied, and this must be served on the parties to the dispute; for it is the intention of the law, not only that Magistrates should have sufficient grounds for proceeding under s. 145, but that they should inform the parties concerned of the grounds on which they are proceeding. Parties who, though not actually involved in the dispute, claim to be in possession of lands which are the subject of proceedings under s. 145, should not be shut out from giving evidence in support of their claims. To do so would undoubtedly occasion very serious prejudice and interference with any possession which they might be able to establish. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GOBIND CHANDRA DAS [I. L. R., 20 Calc., 520]

49. ———— Parties concerned in proceedings—Criminal Procedure Code, s. 145.—The words "parties concerned" in s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code do not necessarily mean only the persons who are disputing, but include also persons who are interested in, or claiming a right to, the property in dispute. *RAM CHANDRA DAS v. 51. ———— Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1892), s. 145—"Parties concerned in dispute"—Death of one of original parties—Substitution of party without fresh proceeding under s. 145—Possession at time of institution of proceeding or at time of final order—Criminal Procedure Code, s. 537.—In a proceeding under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure recorded on the 27th April 1893, A and B were respectively made first and second parties, and were ordered to put in statements of their claims to the land in dispute, which they accordingly did. B died on 24th May 1893. In his statement filed on the 31st May, A disclaimed any interest in the land, but stated that his mother, D K (who had been a party concerned in the dispute which led to the original proceeding), was the owner and in possession of it. On 1st June B S applied to be substituted as a party in place of his father B. D K and B S were made parties without any fresh proceeding under s. 145 of the Code. The case was heard on 27th June and 7th July, and on 17th July the Magistrate found as regards the possession in favour of D K. Held by PETHERAM, C.J., and TRIVELLYAN, J. (RAMPINI, J., dissenting), that since the possession to be enquired into was the possession at the time of the initiation of the proceedings, the words "parties concerned in the dispute" meant parties concerned at that time: there was no power in such a proceeding to introduce parties who were not concerned in the original dispute. No order could therefore be made against B S, and the proceedings were bad as against him. Per RAMPINI, J.—The preliminary proceeding under s. 145 of the Code may, and in many cases must, partake of the character of a general citation to all the parties concerned in the dispute to appear, and it is not necessary for the Magistrate to confine his final order as to possession to the parties whom he may have named in the preliminary proceeding. The Magistrate had power to substitute the name of B S for that of his father without commencing the proceedings de novo. The alteration in s. 145 of Act X of 1882, the present Criminal Procedure Code, of the language of s. 530 of the old Code, Act X of 1872, implies that the Magistrate is to decide on the possession, not at the time of the initiation of the proceedings, but at the time of recording the evidence. If there was any error in the proceedings, it was one cured by s. 537 of the Code. BECHU SHRIKH v. DEB KUMARI DAS . . . I. L. R., 21 Calc., 404

52. ———— Adding parties—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Jurisdiction—Breach of the peace—Joint trial of several cases, whether legal.—A Magistrate must deal with a case under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, as it is originally instituted. If he finds that he cannot do so in respect to one side because they are not parties to the dispute or because it has been shown that no breach of the peace is likely to occur from any action of theirs, he should put an end to the case. A Magistrate is not competent to add parties after the institution of proceedings. Where a Magistrate tried together three cases under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, by consent of parties,—Held that the parties in all the cases not being the same, the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was bad in law. That the evidence already taken might be accepted in one of the cases, but the other cases must be separately tried. RAJ KUMAR SINGH v. MAHADEO SINGH

The manager had no interest, except as such, or possession except as representing the company, and such possession is not the kind of possession contemplated by the section. BEHARI LALL TRIGUNAIT v. 56. ——— Parties concerned—Criminal Procedure Code (1892), s. 145—Initial proceedings—Adding parties during the course of the proceeding.—Before initiating proceedings under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is the duty of the Magistrate not only to be satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists, but also to ascertain, as far as possible, who are concerned in the dispute. The Magistrate has no power to add parties during the course of the proceeding unless in the initial proceeding he is satisfied that they are concerned in the dispute. 57. ——— Parties concerned, Meaning of—Collection of rents—Zamindars and tenants versus rival zamindars and tenants—Necessary parties to proceedings under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure—Omission to add necessary parties—Addition of parties during proceedings.—The words in s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure "parties concerned" in a dispute do not necessarily mean only the parties who are disputing, but include also persons who are interested in or claiming a right to the property in dispute. It is the duty of the Magistrate on the materials before him to ascertain, so far as he can, who are the persons interested in or claiming a right to the property in dispute and to give notice to them all, so that the whole matter, so far as his Court is concerned, may be disposed of in one proceeding. *Ram Chandra Das v. Where there was a dispute as to the ownership of lands between certain zamindars and their tenants on the one side and other zamindars and their tenants on the other, and the real matter for determination was not merely which of the two parties of zamindars were entitled to collect the rents of the lands, but also which set of rival tenants was entitled to hold actual possession of the lands, and in a proceeding under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the zamindars only were made parties and not the tenants. Held (AMEER ALI and STANLEY, JJ.) that the tenants were necessary parties to the proceeding, and the omission to make them parties went to the root of the case and was an illegality affecting jurisdiction which would justify the High Court in setting aside the order. PRINSEP, J.—The omission to join the tenants could not vitiate an order as between the zamindars on an objection that it was without jurisdiction, and that no question of jurisdiction arose in the matter. The High Court's powers are under the Charter Act, and these could be exercised only in respect of jurisdiction. LALDHANI SINGH v. SUKDEO NARAIN SINGH

Upon these findings he came to the conclusion that the possession of the second party had been established, and made an order under the section in their favour. Held that, having regard to the nature of the property in dispute, these facts could not constitute legal possession of the second party at the time the proceedings were instituted. Held further that in like cases, having regard to the nature of the property in dispute, and the mode in which possession may be exercised over it, in order to find which party was in possession when the proceedings were instituted, it is necessary to inquire which party was in undisturbed possession of the land in dispute by felling timber and removing the same without objection on the occasion immediately preceding the one on which the dispute arose; and whichever party be found to have been in possession on that occasion

It is impossible to lay down any hard-and-fast rule which may be applicable to all cases as to the exact point of time to which an inquiry under s. 145 must be directed, and the time at which possession must be found in one party or the other must be governed by the facts of each particular case. To hold that the Magistrate is precluded from inquiring into anything before the date when he actually commenced his own proceedings might in some cases lead to a person who has been acting in an unwarrantable manner misusing the process of the law to enable him to carry out a high-handed and improper scheme, which could never have been the intention of the Legislature. In a proceeding under s. 145 regarding a dispute between two parties concerning certain collieries, it appeared that the first party were certainly in possession of the buildings which contained the office where the business of the collieries was transacted, and where all the cash books and papers of the business were kept, and that the second party had during a period of about fourteen days prior to the commencement of the proceedings succeeded in obtaining possession of the pits, wharves, tramways, etc., of the colliery by what the Court considered to be a high-handed and improper scheme, and acting in an unwarrantable manner. The Magistrate, considering himself bound to find who was in actual possession at the date of the commencement of the proceedings by himself, passed an order in favour of the second party. Held that such order was bad, and that, as the second party was undoubtedly not in possession of the whole of the property in dispute, and the effect of it was to place them in possession of the portion that was in the possession of the first party, the proper order to make under such circumstances was one under s. 146, attaching the property. KATRAS JHERRIA COAL CO. v. The judgment-debtor refused to give up actual possession of the hat, maintaining that it was debutter property of which he was the shebait. A breach of the peace being imminent in consequence of the rival claims, proceedings were taken under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code; and the Magistrate, finding that the judgment-debtor was in actual possession of the hat, made an order maintaining him in such possession until ousted by a Civil Court. Held (setting aside that order) that the Magistrate had no power, under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to direct the judgment-debtor to be retained in possession until ousted by a Civil Court, but was bound to see that the possession, as given by the Nazir, was maintained, leaving it to the debtor to substantiate his claim as shebait in a Civil Court. In a dispute between the wife of a lunatic and the manager of his estate with regard to the possession of certain property, the Magistrate attached the property, under s. 531 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, on the ground that he was unable to satisfy himself as to who was in possession. It had been proved before him that the wife was in actual possession, but there was a doubt as to whether she was not in possession merely as the agent of her husband. Held that s. 530 has only to do with actual possession, and that the Magistrate should have decided that the wife was in possession. IN THE MATTER OF JUGGODESHARY CHOWDHRAIN. 3 C. Subsequently proceedings under s. 145 of the Code were instituted in respect of the same colliery and between the same parties. On the 29th of January 1900, the Magistrate, having found that the second party had been in possession on the 10th of November 1899, passed an order declaring them to be in possession. Held that the proper way of dealing with this case in interpreting the Magistrate's order, was to hold that, whereas by reason of the operation of his order under s. 144 of the Code of the 10th of November 1899 no evidence could be offered to show the possession of either party from that date up to the 29th of December, he was consequently obliged to ascertain the possession immediately before this order and to regard his intervention as an attachment suspending the previous possession, whatever it might be; but that, at the same time, the former possession continued, and although the lawful exercise of its rights had been forbidden for a time, the possession had never ceased to exist. Notice to servants of such persons is not equivalent to notice to them, and in such cases actual notice should be given to all the persons claiming or denying the right and interested in the subject-matter of the inquiry. 156. ———— Reasonable likelihood of a breach of the peace—Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 147—Police report.—The lessee of certain grass land in a village disputed the right of the villagers to graze their cattle on his land during the rainy season. On 26th August 1886 he prosecuted twenty-one villagers before the second class Magistrate for having unlawfully brought their cattle on his land, and committed mischief on the 5th September 1886, and pending this prosecution, the villagers assembled on the land in question and there was a riot. The offenders were convicted and punished. On appeal, the Sub-divisional Magistrate, on the 11th October 1886, upheld the conviction. On the same day, finding from the police report that there existed a dispute between the lessee and the villagers as to the right of the latter to graze cattle on the grass land, and that the dispute was likely to lead to a breach of the peace, the Sub-divisional Magistrate thought it necessary to hold an inquiry into the matter, under s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882). He, however, postponed the inquiry until the decision of the second class Magistrate in the mischief case. In that case the Magistrate found that the villagers had no right to graze cattle on the land in question, and that the lessee was in exclusive possession of it. He therefore held that the villagers had unlawfully entered upon the land; but as the damage done was inappreciable, he acquitted the accused on the 19th October 1886. The Sub-divisional Magistrate, being of opinion that after this decision a breach of the peace was probable, held the enquiry under s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code. He found that the villagers had the right of grazing cattle on the land in question during the autumn, and that they had exercised this right in the last preceding season. He therefore made an order allowing the right of grazing to the villagers. On application by the lessee to the High Court under s. 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code,—Held that the order was illegal. Though the police report afforded some justification for entering upon an inquiry under s. 147, still after the rights of the parties had been judicially pronounced upon by the second class Magistrate in the sense that the villagers had no right of grazing cattle on the land in question, there was no reasonable ground for apprehending any farther violence, and therefore no necessity for holding the inquiry under s. 147. IN RE BALKRISHNA AMBIT PRADHAN

159. ———— Dispute concerning the use of land or water—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 147—Right to build upon land, whether a use of land—Proceeding under s. 147, whether legal—Summary disposal of case upon written statements, without taking any evidence, whether proper.—In a matter under s. 147 as under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Magistrate is bound to hear the evidence tendered by the parties, and he cannot summarily deal with it after inspection of the locality. The right of use of land contemplated by s. 147 is one of an entirely different description resembling a right of easement, not one arising from the terms of a contract between landlord and tenant. A dispute between the landlord and tenant regarding the right of the latter to erect or re-erect a gola which has fallen down is not a matter properly coming within s. 147 of the Code. The settlement of such a dispute, involving issues of right, can be properly determined by a Civil Court. EMPRESS v. GANPAT KALWAR 4 C. W. N., 779

The term "easements" includes profits à prendre; it has not been used by the Legislature of this country in the restricted sense in which it is used in English law so as to exclude profits à prendre. For the purposes of an inquiry contemplated under s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is sufficient if the persons who claim for themselves the right, though that right is derived

161. ———— Criminal Procedure Code (1882), s. 147—Dispute concerning right of fishery—Grounds for Magistrate taking proceedings under s. 147—Procedure.—The words "right to do anything in or upon tangible immovable property" in s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code include julkur right. A Magistrate is competent to take action under that section in the case of a dispute concerning the exercise of a julkur right. Dukhi Mullah v. Halway, I. L. R., 23 Calc., 55, followed. If the materials upon which the proceedings are based do not disclose the fact that there is an imminent danger of a breach of the peace, then the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to take action under s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Any evidence that he may take in the course of the trial cannot give him a jurisdiction which he does not otherwise possess. Queen-Empress v. Govind Chandra Das, I. L. R., 20 Calc., 520. The proper course to be adopted by the Magistrate, when a dispute concerning easements, etc., arises, is to bind down, under s. 107 of the Code, such of the persons as are likely to disturb the peace. *Bathoo Lal v. 163. ———— Right to restrain exercise of easement—Burden of proof—Criminal Procedure Code (1882), s. 147.—The right to restrain another from exercising ordinary proprietary rights over his own land is of the nature of an easement different from the ordinary rights of owners of land; the burden of proof would therefore lie upon the party alleging such rights. 588.—In a proceeding under s. 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Magistrate must decide the fact of possession on evidence taken by himself, and not according to the result of a local inquiry made under s. 533, unless the parties have consented to be bound thereby. Per PRINSEP, J.—The local inquiry referred to in s. 533 should be restricted solely to some question relating to the features of the property about which the dispute has arisen, and should not be directed to any matter which can be proved before the Magistrate by oral evidence. IN THE MATTER OF BAIKUNT KUMAR

170. — Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 522, 523, 524—Order to restore possession of immoveable property.—An order made under s. 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), restoring possession of immoveable property to a person who has been dispossessed of it by criminal force, is an independent order and may be made subsequently to the date of the conviction of the offender. It need not be made at the same time as the conviction. The case contemplated by s. 522 is that of a person in possession (the complainant) being dispossessed by force by another person (the accused), and the latter being in possession at the date of conviction. In such a case the section gives the Magistrate power to order possession to be restored to the complainant. In the case of a proper order, third persons could not be affected; if they are, the order is not thereby necessarily invalid. Cl. 2 of the section gives them a remedy by civil suit. On 27th September 1897 complainant charged one R with criminal trespass under s. 447 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). He alleged that in the previous July R had entered into possession of the land and sowed rice upon it, and that, when in the month of September 1897 he (the complainant) went to the field, R had turned him out by force and refused to vacate the land. On the 17th November 1897 the case was heard by the Third Class Magistrate, who convicted R of the offence charged. On the following day (18th November 1897) the complainant applied to the Magistrate under s. 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) to be restored to possession of the land and of the standing crops. The Magistrate ordered possession of the land to be restored to the complainant, but attached the crops under Ch. XLIII of the Criminal Procedure Code. Thereupon one V intervened, and claimed the crops as having been sown by himself. His claim was disallowed, and the crops were ordered to be sold and the proceeds credited to Government under ss. 523 and 524 of the Code. Held that the order made by the Magistrate under s. 522 restoring possession of the land to the complainant was bad, because it did not appear that the offence of which the accused was convicted was attended with criminal force, and that the dispossession was due to the use of such force. The illegal entry complained of had taken place in July 1897. The accused then took possession, and in September, being then still in possession, forcibly resisted the complainant when he attempted to enter upon the land. The complainant, however, did not charge the accused with this assault, but with the trespass which had taken place in July. It is only when the actual use of criminal force leads to dispossession that an order under s. 522 can be made. Held also that the order passed under ss. 523 and 524 with reference to the crops were illegal. The crops were not property in respect of which the offence was committed, nor were they used in the commission of the offence. They were not such property as is referred to in s. 517, 523, or 524 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Held also that the Third Class Magistrate as such had no authority to make an order under s. 524. *NABAYAN GOVIND v. Where, however, the decision under s. 145 was passed on the 19th December 1893, and the application for costs was made on the 21st December, but owing to delay arising from the action of the objectors the order for costs was not made until the 16th June 1894, but then by the same Magistrate who passed the order under s. 145,—Held that the order was not void for want of jurisdiction, and there being no suggestion that it was unjust or improper on the merits, the Court declined to interfere with it in the exercise of their discretionary power of revision under s. 439. *BINODA SUNDARI CHOWDHURANI v. 1. ——— Construction of power—Power to sell or mortgage ship.—In construing power-of-attorney, the special purpose for which the power is given is first to be regarded, and the most general words following the declaration of that special purpose will be construed to be merely all such powers as are needed for its effectuation. Where the owner of a ship by power-of-attorney constituted the master his agent, and authorized him to raise or borrow upon the ship's papers such sums of money as he should deem necessary for the repair of the ship, "and to act in the premises as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as I might or could do if personally present." In a suit for the amount of a mortgage-bond upon the ship executed by the master,—Held that the master had no authority to sell or mortgage the ship. JUDAH v. ADDI RAJA QUEEN BIBI 2 Mad., 177

2. ——— Power to refer to arbitration.—T, having frequent occasion to prosecute and defend suits in different Courts and being unable to give his personal attention to them, executed a power of attorney in S's favour, whereby he authorized S to watch the cases on his behalf, to appoint any pleader or mooktear, to receive, after giving a receipt for the same, any money deposited for, and due to, him from the Courts, to act on his behalf in cases of dakhil-kharaj, and obtain the entry of his name after getting the names of other persons expunged, to purchase villages with the money due under decrees, to file on his behalf receipts, acquittances, raji namahs, and other documents, and to get back deeds and decrees and give receipts and acquittances. Held that the terms of the power-of-attorney did not authorize S to refer questions to arbitration. THAKOOR PERSHAD v. KALKA PERSHAD 6 N. W., 210

3. ——— Power to sue given to an agent, Extent of—Vakil, Reasonable remuneration to, under such power.—A mere power to sue does not authorize an agent to do more than employ a vakil on the terms of paying him a reasonable remuneration. KESHAV BAPUJI v. NARAYAN SHAMRAY [I. L. R., 10 Bom., 18

4. ——— Authority to enter into special agreement with vakil—Agreement to remunerate according to proportion recovered.—The defendant, on behalf of her minor son, gave to S M a power-of-attorney by which she authorized S M, "for her and in her name and on her behalf to appear in or sue or defend . . . any suit, appeal, or special appeal, . . . and to act in all such proceedings in any way in which she might, if present, be permitted or called on to act." Held that the above power did not authorize S M to enter into a special agreement with a vakil, under which the vakil (in an appeal which he was employed to conduct for the defendant on behalf of her minor son) was to receive for his services a minimum reward of Rs. 4,000, and, in cases of success, a reward proportional to the amount awarded by the Appellate Court. RAY SAHEB V. N. MANDLIK v. KAMALJIBAI SAHEB NIMBALKAR 10 Bom., 26

5. ——— Power to execute bond.—Under a power-of-attorney executed by twenty proprietors of a joint estate, empowering their general manager to raise loans for the purposes of the estate upon bonds, and to sign their names or his name on their behalf, and to pledge the whole or any part of the estate by such bonds, the attorney executed a bond on behalf of three of the proprietors. Held that under the power-of-attorney the manager was not authorized to execute a bond on behalf of any one or more of the proprietors making him or them responsible for the whole money borrowed to the exclusion of the rest. Held, further, that in a suit upon a bond so executed, the plaintiffs were not entitled to rely upon the general power which the manager might have, as the manager's authority must be considered as strictly confined to the terms of the power-of-attorney. BUDH SINGH DUDHURIA v. DENDRA NATH SANCUL 11 C. L. R., 323

6. ——— Mooktearnama—Execution of bond to secure barred debt—Contract Act, s. 26.—A mooktearnama empowering the mooktear to execute bonds in lieu of former debts does not authorize the mooktear to execute a bond to secure a debt already barred by limitation. Where, however, a suit is brought upon a bond executed to secure a former debt, it must be shown by the person alleging it that such debt was barred: HUBBAL SUKUL v. RAM GOTT DEY ROY 11 C. L. 7. ——— Mooktearnama—Authority of agent—Power to make gift.—A mooktearnama merely gave the mooktear power to grant ticca ijara leases and, when advisable, to sell, mortgage, and make gift of the whole or portion of the property of the principal. Held that the mooktear had no power to create a permanent tenure. The power of making a gift given by the mooktearnama authorized the mooktear formally to execute a deed of gift only when the disposing power had been exercised by the principal. TYEBUNNESSA v. KANIZ FATIMA . . . 13 C. L. R., 247

8. ————— Power to dispose of property—Authority to pledge.—A power-of-attorney authorized the holder "to dispose" of certain property in any way he thought fit. Held that the holder of such power had no authority to mortgage the property. A power-of-attorney must be construed strictly. MALUKCHAND BIN GYANMAL v. SHAN MOGHAN VARDRAJ

[I. L. R., 14 Bom., 590]

9. ————— Power to "sell, endorse, and assign" negotiable securities.—The payee of promissory notes of the East India Company, by a power-of-attorney, authorized his agents at Calcutta to "sell, endorse, and assign" the notes. These notes were transferable by endorsement payable to bearer. The agents, in their character of private bankers, borrowed money of the Bank of Bengal, offering, as security, these promissory notes. The Bank made the advance, and the agents endorsed the notes, such endorsement purporting to be as attorney for their principal, and deposited them with the Bank, by way of collateral security for their personal liability, at the same time authorizing the Bank, in default of payment, to sell the notes in reimbursement of the advances. The agents afterwards became insolvent, and default having been made in payment, the Bank sold the notes and realized the amount of their loan. Held that the endorsement of the notes by the agents of the payee to the Bank was within the scope of the authority given to them by the power-of-attorney, and that the payee could not recover in detinue against the Bank. The rule laid down in the case of Gill v. Cubitt, 3 B. & C., 466, and Down v. Halling, 4 B. & C., 380, that the negligence of a party taking a negotiable instrument fixes him with the defective title of the party passing it, observed upon, and those cases declared to be no longer law. *BANK OF BENGALE v. 10. ————— Power to sell or mortgage.—Under a power-of-attorney containing a clause empowering A to sell or mortgage the donor's property for the payment of his debts, A executed a simple money-bond to one of the donor's creditors, for payment of the sum due and interest. Held that the act was extra vires, and did not bind the donor. POORNA CHUNDER SEN v. PRASUNNO COOMAR DASS

11. ————— Principal and agent - "Purchase, sell, endorse, and transfer" - Meaning of "Power to sell."—N & Co. having a joint and several power-of-attorney from the plaintiff, authorizing them "to purchase, sell, endorse, and transfer for the plaintiff, and in the plaintiff's name and on the plaintiff's behalf," all shares standing in his name in the books of any public company or society, entered into a contract embodied in bought and sold notes, agreeing to sell by order and on account of N & Co. to the defendant, twenty-five Muir Mill Cotton shares, and agreeing to buy, by order and for account of N & Co., from the defendant, twenty-five Muir Mill Cotton shares in three months' time at an advanced rate; the bought and sold notes bearing the same date and being one transaction. The transfer deeds were signed by a partner in the firm of N & Co. as attorney for the plaintiff, and N & Co. received the purchase-money of the shares. Previous to the time fixed for the sale of twenty-five Muir Mill Cotton shares by the defendant to N & Co., the latter became insolvent. The plaintiff then brought a suit to recover the shares from the defendant. Held by GARTH, C.J., that the transaction between N & Co. and the defendant was not justified by the power-of-attorney, the contract not having been entered into "for and on behalf and in the name of the plaintiff" within the meaning of the power; and that the transaction was either an actual loan or a transaction in the nature of a loan for the purpose of raising money. Per WILSON, J., that the defendant took no title to the shares for two reasons, viz.: (i) because a power to sell is only a power to sell in the ordinary course of business, i.e., for a money price; (ii) because it was the duty of the defendant, seeing that the shares were sold to him under a power, to see that he paid the price to the plaintiff or his attorney. JUMNA DOSS v. ECKFORD . . . I. L. R., 9 Cal., 1

12. ————— Meaning of the word "negotiate" with reference to Government securities.—W gave to A and B a power-of-attorney authorizing them jointly and severally to "negotiate, make sale, dispose of, assign, and transfer," amongst other things, certain Government securities standing in his name. B pledged the securities for an advance of ₹19,000, and at the same time executed a promissory note for the amount of the loan, the promissory note being signed "B, as attorney for W." In a suit by W to recover the Government security, — Held in the Court below that the power-of-attorney was sufficiently wide to cover the transaction; that the transaction was a fraud on the part of B, but that the transferee (the defendant) had no notice of the fraud, and therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed. Held on appeal per WHITE, J.—(i) That the words of the power were to be read disjunctively, and the powers conveyed by the words were to be treated as joint and several; (ii) that even supposing the word "negotiable" to be applicable to transactions with Government securities (which was doubtful), and that such Government securities stood in the same position as ordinary commercial notes, the word "negotiate" did not authorize B to do more than put the Government securities in the market, or to put them in circulation in the ordinary way in which such a transaction takes place in the market, and if necessary to endorse them in the name of W; (iii) that the loan, which was the principal transaction, being irrecoverable from W, because unauthorized, the defendant could not return the Government securities, which were deposited as security for the loan, he not having taken the precaution to ascertain whether B had authority to enter into that transaction. Per GARTH, C.J.—That although, on the authority of The Bank of Bengal v. Fagan, 5 Moore's I. A., 27, a power to negotiate Government securities would authorize the negotiation of Government securities by way of pledge, yet W was entitled to a decree, on the ground that A and B had no power, under the power-of-attorney, to borrow money in the name of W; and that therefore the defendant was not entitled to retain the security given for the advance (viz., the Government promissory note). WATSON v. JONMENJOY COONDoo. I. L. R., 8 Calc., 934

On appeal to the Privy Council,—Held that, with regard to the general objects of the power, B had under it no authority to pledge, and that the lender of the money acquired no title to the note as against W. The power-of-attorney was not in the same form as that in the Bank of Bengal v. Macleod, 5 Moore's I. A., 1, and Bank of Bengal v. Fagan, 5 Moore's I. A., 27, not containing, in express words, power to indorse. Had it done so, the question would have been whether there was anything to prevent it from being a power, in the discretion of the donees of it, to indorse the note, and convert it into one payable to bearer, whenever he thought fit to do so, for any purpose. It was not laid down in the judgment in those cases that the words used in a power-of-attorney, to express its objects, are always to be construed disjunctively, though they may be so construed; and there is no reason why a rule of construction, intended to aid in arriving at the meaning of the parties, should not be applied in construing a power-of-attorney as much as any other document. JONMENJOY COONDoo v. WATSON

[I. L. R., 10 Calc., 901

13. ——— Principal and agent—Bank manager acting as private agent—Transaction for benefit of Bank.—A, being in uncontrolled management of the National Bank in Calcutta and purporting to act under a power-of-attorney intended to be given to him in his private capacity, but addressed to him as "acting manager of the National Bank" by B, a constituent of the Bank, without drawing any cheque on B's account and simply by means of transferring in the books of the Bank *Rs*15,000 from B's deposit account with the Bank to the account of one C who was indebted to the National Bank, purported to make an advance of *Rs*15,000 from B to C, whereas, in fact, the real transaction amounted only to transferring the liability of C to that extent from the Bank to B. Held that, so far as this transaction was concerned, A could not divest himself of his character of Bank manager, and that, acting as the agent of both parties, he acted to the prejudice of B and to the advantage of the Bank, and that there was, in fact, a breach of his duty to B to which the Bank was a party. Held also that A was not able under the power-of-attorney to bind B by consenting to any dealings by the Bank or C with goods in the Bank's godowns which would prejudice B. BEER v. NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA

[19 W. R., 67

14. ——— Stamp—Operation of power confined to British India—Stamp Act

POWER-OF-ATTORNEY—concluded.

(I of 1879), s. 5.—It is not necessary for the Courts in India to consider whether a power-of-attorney issued in England, but which is intended to operate in British India, complies with the fiscal requirements of the stamp laws in England. It is sufficient if such power-of-attorney is stamped according to the stamp laws of British India. Bristow v. Sequerville, 5 Ex., 275, and James v. Catherwood, 3 D. & R., 190, followed. Clegg v. Levy, 3 Camp., 166, not followed. Semble—If such a power-of-attorney was intended to operate in England, as well as in British India, it would not be invalid, so far as it was intended to operate in British India, because the requirements of the stamp laws in England had not been fulfilled. It would be sufficient if it complied with the requirements of the Indian law. IN THE GOODS OF McADAM

1. CIVIL CASES.

1. ———— Adjournment—Failure to procure sufficient evidence—Costs.—A plaintiff failed in an ex-parte suit to bring forward sufficient evidence to entitle him to a decree, and asked for an adjournment in order to obtain further evidence; the Court granted an adjournment on the terms that the plaintiff should bear the whole costs of the hearing. SHANKS v. SAVAGE I. L. R., 7 Cal., 177

2. ———— Admiralty Court—Consolidation of salvage claims—Civil Procedure Code (1882)—Rules and Regulations under Stat. 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 51—Procedure.—On an application by the impugnant for the consolidation of three separate salvage claims made by three different promovents for salvage services rendered by them, —Held (following the more recent English practice) that the claims should not be consolidated against the will of the promovents, but should be heard one after the other successively, subject, however, to one set only of costs being allowed to them in the event of the Court finding at the hearing that the application for consolidation was resisted without sufficient grounds. In such a case (as there is no procedure for such an application prescribed by the Rules and Regulations made in pursuance of 2 and 3 Will. IV, c. 51, nor any procedure for consolidation in the Civil Procedure Code), the practice of the Court of Admiralty in England ought to be followed so far as such practice can be applied to this country by analogy. commission to take evidence before written statements are filed.—On an application by the impugnant for the consolidation of two separate salvage claims made by two different promovents for salvage services rendered by them and for the issue of a commission to examine the witness of the impugnant de bene esse.—Held that it is within the discretion of the High Court to consolidate the actions without regard to the consent of the parties, each of the promovents being allowed to appear separately through their own attorney and counsel. Held further that, though no written statements had yet been filed, the application for consolidation and for a commission to examine de bene esse was not premature. In re the "Falls of Eitrick," 1 L. R., 22 Cal., 511, referred to. The "Strathgarry," (1895) L. R., P. D., 264, followed. IN THE MATTER OF THE "DRACHENFELS." RETRINER v. DRACHENFELS

[3 C. W. N., 67]

4. ——— Affidavits—Entitling affidavits—In showing cause against a rule nisi for a mandamus in proceedings under the Calcutta Municipal Act to obtain compensation from the Justices, the affidavits should be simply entitled "In the High Court." The affidavits, though wrongly entitled, were admitted. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE FOR CALCUTTA v. ORIENTAL GAS COMPANY 8 B. L. R., 438; 17 W. R., 364

5. ——— Affidavit on application to take documents out of Court.—An affidavit in support of an application for taking documents out of the custody of the Court for the purposes of another suit should state in what way they are material to that suit. MOLLOW, MARCH & Co. v. PERTAB CHUNDER SINGH

[1 Ind Jur., N. S., 363]

6. ——— Affidavit on showing cause against motion or petition.—An affidavit intended to be used to oppose or show cause against a motion or petition is filed in time, if filed, on or before the sitting of the Court, on the day that cause is in fact shown, although not filed before the sitting of the Court on the day for which notice was given. IN RE HURBUCK CHUND GOMCHA

7. ——— Affidavits on motion—Affidavits filed after adjournment for convenience of counsel.—The Court refused, without the consent of the other side, to allow an affidavit in support of a motion to be read, which had been filed after an adjournment granted for convenience of counsel. COURJON v. COURJON

8. ——— Act XVIII of 1863—Verification of affidavits.—When an individual, who is unable to read and write, presents himself to affirm solemnly or make oath to the truth of an affidavit, it will be sufficient, in order to meet the requirements of s. 9, Act XVIII of 1863, in obtaining his verification, to allow him to affix his "mark" in lieu of his "signature," and, in affirming or swearing him, to vary the usual words by saying "mark instead of signature," in lieu of "signature." ANONYMOUS 9 W. R., 357

9. ——— Use of affidavits in motions—Rule to show cause.—The practice is in motion to stay execution, and others, to put in a verified petition or affidavit, the costs of which is allowed in taxation; but where a rule to show cause had been obtained on the facts set out in the plaint, WHITE, J., declined to refuse the hearing of the rule simply because no verified petition or affidavit had been filed. KRISTO MOHNEY DOSSEE v. KALLY PROSONNO GHOSH

10. ——— Non-production of affidavit—Withdrawal of suit.—The plaintiff's attorney being under the misapprehension that one of the plaintiffs, who was a material witness, was in Bombay, when in fact he was in England, and an application to consent to a commission had been made to the defendant's attorney, and refused on the eve of the hearing, an application was made to the Judge in Chambers on the morning of the day fixed for the hearing, and supported by an affidavit, for the issuing of a commission and for an adjournment of the suit; and the Judge declining to make an order in Chambers, the application was renewed in Court, when the Judge refused to take notice of what occurred before himself in Chambers, and made note that the application for a commission was made upon no affidavit; and as the affidavit (presented in Chambers), having been sent to the office of the plaintiff's attorneys for a copy to be made and served upon the defendant, was not then in Court, the application for a commission and to adjourn the hearing was refused, and plaintiff's counsel not being instructed to proceed with the hearing, and leave to withdraw the suit having been also refused, the suit was dismissed. Held that the Judge was wrong in refusing to postpone the case for the production of the affidavit in Court, and that there was no legal ground whatever for the refusal to withdraw the suit, which was accordingly restored to its place in the list and remanded in order to be tried. DADABHAI NAOROJI & Co. v. SOBANJI COWASJI

[3 Bom., O. C., 55]

11. ——— Application for decree on terms of agreement to compromise suit—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 375.—After the hearing of the suit had begun, the plaintiffs and defendants came to an agreement by which they settled all the matters in dispute between them in the suit. The agreement was in writing, and dealt in one clause with the dispute, the subject-matter of the suit, and in a second clause, with another dispute of long standing between the parties, with which the suit had nothing to do. The plaintiffs subsequently objecting to consent to a decree being taken in terms of the first clause of the agreement, the defendants took out a rule nisi, calling on the plaintiffs to show cause why the agreement should not be recorded in Court and why the Court should not pass a decree in accordance therewith under the provisions of s. 375 of the Civil Procedure Code. The rule was argued on affidavits on either side, the plaintiffs objecting that in any case the matter could not be decided on affidavits, but evidence must be gone into. Held that, in the circumstances of the case, no definite procedure having been enjoined by the Code, the matter might properly be decided on affidavits. RUTTONSAY LALJI v. POORIBAI

[I. L. R., 7 Bom., 304]

12. ——— Appeal—Appeal against a co-plaintiff—Consent of parties.—By consent of parties, the High Court allowed an appeal by one plaintiff against another plaintiff, and adjudicated upon their rights. BHAGIRTHIBAI v. BAYA
[I. L. R., 5 Bom., 264]

13. ——— Appeal by one plaintiff against another—Rival claimants put on the record as representatives of deceased plaintiff.—In a suit for redemption one of the plaintiffs died. A, the adopted son, and B, the daughter, made separate applications under s. 365 of the Civil Procedure Code to be placed on the record. The Judge ordered them both to be put on the record and proceeded with the suit, and finding that A's adoption was proved, and that B was not the legal heir of the deceased, he gave a decree for redemption in favour of A. B appealed making A alone respondent. The Appellate Court held that B, and not A, was heir of deceased, and passed a decree in B's favour against A. On second appeal to the High Court, —Held that the Judge had no power under s. 367 of the Code to admit on the record both rival claimants as legal representatives or adjudicate by his decree between their rival claims; and that the Appellate Court ought not to have allowed one plaintiff to appeal against another or to have decided the rights of different plaintiffs inter se. VITHU v. BHIMA
[I. L. R., 15 Bom., 145]

14. ——— Appeal between co-defendants—Right of appeal.—Where a Subordinate Judge dealt with a case at the hearing as raising not only a question between the plaintiff and defendants, but also as between the defendants, —Held that one of the defendants could appeal against the decree as between himself and the other defendants. Gudadhar Banerjee v. Mun Mohinee Dosses, 7 Cal. W. R., 866, and Atma Ram v. Balkishen, I. L. R., 5 All., 266, distinguished. SOIRU PADMANABH RANGAPPA v. NARAYANRAO BIN VITHALRAO . . . I. L. R., 18 Bom., 520

15. ——— Respondent not appearing in lower Court—Right of appeal.—An appellant who was respondent in a lower Court of Appeal is not precluded, by reason of his non-appearance in such Court, from preferring an appeal to the High Court. KALKISHORE ROY v. DRUMUNJOY ROY . . . I. L. R., 3 Cal., 228

16. ——— Right of respondent, who has filed cross-objections to appeal, where appellant withdraws his appeal.—No leave to appeal should be granted to a respondent who has filed cross-objections, unless the Court is thoroughly satisfied upon affidavit that he was ready to appeal, and would have appealed within the proper time if the other side had not done so. GOUR HARI SANYAL v. PREM NATH SANYAL

17. ——— Decision showing grounds of judgment appealed from.—The copy of a decision to which reference is made by the lower Appellate Court for the grounds on which an appeal is disposed of is not necessary at the time of filing a special appeal. ANONYMOUS
[1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 50]

18. ——— Pleadings—Certifying grounds of appeal.—Pleadings should see that the grounds of appeal they certify to are full and need no addition. RAM KRISTO DEB v. RAJ CHUNDER SURMAH . . . 11 W. R., 246

19. ——— Certificate of grounds of appeal—Vakil a party to suit.—Where a party appealing to the High Court is himself a vakil of the Court, he is not at liberty to certify his own grounds of appeal. THAKOOR DOSS MOOKERJEE v. AMBER MUNDUL . . . 14 W. R., 188

20. ——— Certifying that ground of appeal taken was omitted from his notice by Judge—Affidavit.—In order to satisfy the High Court that a point which the Judge omitted to notice was actually taken in the oral pleadings, a party may put in either an affidavit of some person who heard the point raised, or a copy of the petition to the Judge drawing attention to the omission, with his orders thereon. YUSOOF ALI CHOWDRY v. FYZOOON-ISSA KHATOON CHOWDRY . . . 15 W. R., 296

21. ——— Grounds of appeal argued not in memorandum of appeal.—Although, as a rule, the Court will not permit grounds of appeal to be taken in argument which have not been taken in the memorandum of appeal, yet where a decree comes before it, which is upon its very face illegal, the Court is bound to take up the point itself and rectify the mistake. POBAN SOOKE CHUNDER v. PARBUTTY DOSSEE

22. ——— Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 553—Application to restore an appeal dismissed ex-parte—Evidence—Practice.—When an application is made to restore an appeal which has been dismissed ex-parte for default of appearance, the applicant must produce all his evidence in support of the application before the Court to which it is made. If he does not do so and the application is dismissed, he cannot be allowed to supplement such evidence in a Court of Appeal on appeal from the order dismissing his application. Hari Das Mukerji v. Radha Kishen Das, Weekly Notes (All.), 1890, 196, followed. MUZAFFAR ALI KHAN v. KEDAR NATH . . . I. L. R., 20 All., 266

1. CIVIL CASES—continued.

23. ———— Arguments on appeal under Letters Patent, High Court, North-Western Provinces, cl. 10—Points on which appellant may be heard.—In appeals under the Letters Patent, s. 10, an appellant is not entitled to be heard on points which he has not raised before the Judge against whose decree he is appealing. BRIJ BHUKHAN v. DURGA DAS . . . I. L. R., 20 All., 258

24. ———— Rules of Court, 30th November 1889—Memorandum of appeal, Misdescription in—Appeal described as "first appeal from order" instead of "first appeal from decree."—It is not a fatal objection to an appeal that the same is described in the memorandum as "First appeal from Order," being in reality a first appeal from a decree, it not being shown that the respondent was in any way prejudiced by such misdescription, or that by reason thereof an insufficient stamp was placed on the memorandum. Kedar Nath v. Lalji Sahai, I. L. R., 12 All., 61, quoad this point, distinguished. SANT LAL v. SRI KISHEN [I. L. R., 14 All., 221]

25. ———— Necessity for copy of decree appealed against accompanying a memorandum of appeal—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 541.—A memorandum of appeal is not a good memorandum of appeal in law unless it is accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed against. Gulab Dasi v. Sankar Lal, Weekly Notes, All. (1892), 47, followed. CHAMELA KUAR v. AMIR KHAN . . . I. L. R., 16 All., 77

26. ———— Appeal, Hearing of, when records have been accidentally destroyed—New trial, Right of.—Where, in the interval between the original hearing of a case and the appeal, the record or the greater part of it was destroyed in an earthquake, and the Appellate Court set aside the judgment of the first Court and directed the suit to be tried de novo,—Held that the mere fact that the record was accidentally destroyed cannot give the appellant a right of re-trial of the original suit, and that it is open to the Court of Appeal to try the case upon any materials proved to have been used at the hearing of the first Court, and it is for the appellant to put those materials before the Court. HAR KUMAR PAL CHOWDRY v. ASIATULLAH [3 C. W. N., 150]

27. ———— Application after refusal—Making application to another Judge, after refusal by one Judge to make it.—It is irregular, when an application has been made to one Judge of the High Court and refused, that the same application should be made to another Judge without stating the facts of the former refusal. VYTHELINGA MUDRELY v. CUNDASAWMY MUDRELY . . . 8 Mad., 21

28. ———— Application to another Judge after refusal of application by one Judge of High Court—Review—Appeal.—If an interlocutory order is wrongly refused by one Judge, the proper course is to apply for a review or to appeal from it, not to seek to obtain the order by resorting to another Judge, even though arguments should then be forthcoming which were not put before the first Judge. MOTIVAHU v. PRAMVAHU

[I. L. R., 16 Bom., 511]

29. ———— Application by person not party to suit—Lessors—Receiver.—Case in which persons not parties to a suit in which a receiver had been appointed were permitted to apply, by motion or notice in the suit, for the purpose of establishing their rights to obtain an order directing the receiver to make over to them certain properties of which he was holding possession after expiry of the lease under which those properties had been held by him, and which had been granted to his predecessor in title by certain persons through whom the applicants claimed as representatives. Neale v. WOOMBESH CHUNDER PAUL . . . 2 Hyde, 86

BHOYRUB CHUNDER DOSS v. CHUNDI CHURN MITTER . . . Bourke, O. C., 239

31. ———— Setting down case in general cause list—Entering appearance.—The Court has power to order a case to be set down at once in the general cause list, if the defendant enters appearance by his attorney before the time for appearance fixed in the summons has expired. When a defendant so appears, the Registrar ought so to set down the case as a matter of course, or at least ask the Judge in Chambers whether he should do so or not. CUMMING v. GREEN [4 B. L. R., Ap., 75]

32. ———— Cases to be entered in the list of suits for liquidated claims—Rules 281 and 284 of the Calcutta High Court, Original Jurisdiction—Removal of cases improperly entered in that list—Ordinary mortgage suit—Notice of transfer of case.—Held that the practice of the Court having been for many years to place ordinary mortgage suits on the list of suits for liquidated claims in the view that the incidental relief sought in such suits did not prevent them from being regarded as suits in which the claim was in substance a claim only for a liquidated demand in money, the practice should be adhered to. Held also that, when a suit is transferred from the general list of cases (at the instance of the plaintiff), it is desirable that this should be done on notice to the defendant, so that he may not be taken by surprise. BENODE LALL ROY v. BURSUNTO KUMARI DEBI [I. L. R., 27 Cal., 355]

33. ———— Certificate of sale—Unregistered certificate of sale—Fresh certificate of sale.—

On 10th July 1883 the applicant bought at a Court-sale a portion of a house for Rs35, and on confirmation of the sale on the 10th October 1883 obtained the sale certificate, which, however, he did not register. On attempting to obtain possession, the applicant was obstructed. He applied for removal of the obstruction to the Subordinate Judge, and submitted with his application the unregistered certificate. The Subordinate Judge rejected the application on the ground that the certificate was not registered. The applicant then applied for a fresh certificate, which was refused. On application to the High Court,—Held that a fresh certificate dated the day on which it might be granted, reciting the fact of the sale and the date thereof, should be given to the applicant, the original certificate being returned. IN THE MATTER OF THE APPLICATION OF LAKSHMAN . I. L. R., 9 Bom., 472

34. ———— Grant of fresh certificate of sale to auction-purchaser while one already granted is in existence—Insufficient stamp.—A Court having once granted a certificate of sale to an auction-purchaser is under no obligation to give him another, in order that he may escape the penalty which he has incurred by reason of the certificate being insufficiently stamped. NANDRAM MOTIRAM v. KACHA BHAI . I. L. R., 9 Bom., 526

35. ———— Commission—Commission to examine witnesses—Non-attendance of witnesses—Mode of enforcing attendance—Code of Civil Procedure (1882), ss. 399 and 400, and Sch. IV, No. 156.—On an application to the High Court to authorize a commissioner to issue process for the purpose of compelling the attendance of witnesses before him,—Held that the commissioner should return the commission to the High Court. The High Court may then send the commission to a Civil Court, within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the witnesses to be examined reside. MAHOMED ALI v. WAZID ALI . I. L. R., 23 Calc., 404

36. ———— Commissioner for taking accounts—Certificate of, Power to grant—Mode of taking accounts.—The general nature of a certificate or report—whether general or separate—by the commissioner for taking accounts is that it should, in the case of a general certificate, comprise the result of all the proceedings under the decree or order of reference, or, in the case of a separate certificate or report, that it should comprise the result of some or one of such proceedings, and the Court is not bound to consider a certificate granted by the commissioner unless he has certified what may be regarded as the result either of the whole enquiry referred to him or of some branch or part of it. The power of the commissioner to grant certificates, and of the Court to deal with motion made with reference thereto, considered. Quare—Whether, where a suit has been referred to the commissioner for the purpose of having account taken, such accounts, in the absence of any direction in the decree or order of reference that stated or settled accounts are not to be disturbed, should not be taken without regard to any previous accounts stated or

settled between the parties. BUSTOMJI BURJORJI v. KASSOWJI NAIK . I. L. R., 3 Bom., 161

37. ———— Report of Commissioner—Motion to discharge or vary—Affidavits, Filing of—Memorandum of objections.—In moving to discharge or vary the report of the commissioner for taking accounts, the right practice is to move on a memorandum of objections filed on the Prothonotary's office, and upon the evidence taken by, and the proceedings before, the commissioner, and not on affidavits made for the purpose of the motion. In such a motion affidavits should only be filed (a) when ordered by the Court, if it desire fresh evidence; or (b) by special leave of the Court for the purpose of advancing a fact which does not appear on the face of the proceedings before the commissioner. SUMAR AHMED v. ISMAIL HAJI HABIB [I. L. R., 1 Bom., 158]

38. ———— Notice to vary final report—Limitation—Rule of Court, Ch. 6, cl. 6 (ed. 1867).—Held that under the rule, which requires that a notice to vary the report of the commissioner for taking accounts (Rule of Court, Ch. 6, rule 6, ed. 1867) is to be made within twenty days after the filing of the report, the Court has discretion to extend the time for making such motion. HORMASJI CURSETJI ASHBURNER v. BOMANSI CURSETJI ASHBURNER . I. L. R., 9 Bom., 250

39. ———— Commissioner's report, Application to vary time for—Extension of time—High Court Rules, Ch. VI, Rule 6.—A party desiring to move to vary a report made by the commissioner must not only file his exceptions to such report, but must also make his motion to vary it within twenty days after the filing of the report; or if the Judge or the Court have allowed him further time for such application, then within the further time so allowed. NAROTTAM VISHOOKANDAS v. HARICHAND RAMCHAND . I. L. R., 13 Bom., 368

40. ———— Disobedience of order made by commissioner for taking accounts—Attachment, Issue of.—An attachment will issue to compel a party to a suit to obey an order made by the commissioner for taking accounts upon the certificate of the commissioner that such order has been made and disobeyed, without, in the first instance, making such order a rule of Court. DHURANDHAR-DAS SAKHARAM v. BHAI GOVIND . 10 Bom., 4

41. ———— Consent decree—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 875.—According to the practice of the High Court, a consent decree upon a compromise will not be granted, unless the suit be entered in the cause list of the Court. PEEL v. VALETTA [5 C. L. R., 464]

42. ———— Mode of consent. The practice of the High Court at Calcutta on its original side in the case of decrees by consent is to require the defendant in person, or some one instructed by him, to appear in Court to consent. SAUNDERS v. ROMANATH PAUL . 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 395

43. ———— Setting aside consent decree—Motion—Separate suit—Allegation of fraud—Affidavits.—A consent decree cannot be set aside on motion on the ground that it was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation. A separate suit must be brought for that purpose. Charges of fraud cannot properly be tried upon affidavits. *Gibert v. Ende & Co., L. R., 9 Ch. D., 259; Huddersfield Banking Company v. [I. L. R., 12 Bom., 454]

46. ———— Counsel's fees—Costs—Attorney and client—Taxation—Refreshers to counsel—Rules of Court, 707, 708.—Refreshers are not, as a general rule, to be allowed on motion heard by affidavit; but the Court hearing the motion can, in its discretion, and if applied to for the purpose, give special directions allowing costs as on the hearing of a case. In the absence of such special directions, refreshers should not be allowed. GARDEN REACH SPINNING AND MANUFACTURING COMPANY v. EMPRESS OF INDIA COTTON MILLS COMPANY

[I. L. R., 12 Calo., 551]

47. ———— Court-fees—Remission of process fees—Rules of High Court, Calcutta, Ch. XIV—Process fees—Remission of fees in analogous appeals by the same appellants.—Where twenty-nine appeals were presented by certain appellants, and an application was made for remission of process fees, and that only 5 sets of process fees instead of twenty-nine should be charged under Ch. XIV of the Rules of High Court, on the ground that the appeals were analogous and on behalf of the same appellants, the Court (GHOSE and RAMPINI, JJ.) refused the application. Held by RAMPINI, J., that the High Court has no power to grant the remission, and that the fees prescribed by the rules must be levied. IN THE MATTER OF THE APPLICATION OF STUDD

[20 W. R., 444]

52. ———— Execution of deed—Motion to compel execution by infant of conveyance of land.—Motion to compel the execution, by an infant, of a conveyance of land, refused on the ground that such an order on such motion was virtually a decree for specific performance. MONOMATHONATH DAY v. AUBHOOTOSH DAY Cor., 6

53. ———— Extraordinary jurisdiction of High Court, Application in Copies of orders of lower Courts.—All applications to the High Court, in the exercise of its extraordinary civil jurisdiction, should be accompanied by a copy of the orders of the lower Courts made in respect of the matter of such application, and should be presented within the time allowed for the presentation of special appeals. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF NAGAPPA BIN HULGAPPA 5 Bom., A. 54. ———— Fund in Court—Costs—Attorney's lien—Lien—Attaching creditor—Fund in Court attached.—A sum of money had been paid into Court as admittedly due to the plaintiff in a certain suit; the plaintiff not having satisfied in full his attorney's taxed bill of costs, the attorney applied for payment out of the fund in Court; previously to this application, the fund had been attached by a third party. Held that the attorney was entitled to enforce his lien as against the attaching creditor for all costs incurred up to the date of attachment; that the attaching creditor was then entitled to be satisfied before the attorney could claim payment out of the balance in Court of any sum remaining due to him on account of his costs. *SUPRAMANYAN SETHI v. 55. ———— Inspection and production of documents—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1892), s. 136—Non-compliance with order for production of documents—Defence struck out.—Where a defendant neglects to comply with an order for production and inspection, the Court will, although in the last resort, order his defence to be struck out. ASSENOLLA JOO v. ABDOL AZIZ

[I. L. R., 9 Calc., 233]

56. ———— Failure to answer within the time limited—Dismissal of suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1892), Ch. X, ss. 121, 126, and 136.—The question as to whether the Courts below have exercised a proper discretion in dismissing a suit under s. 136 of the Civil Procedure Code is one into which the High Court will not enter on special appeal. When interrogatories are delivered with the leave of the Court under s. 121 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the Court orders such interrogatories to be answered within ten days under s. 126, there is virtually an order passed under the provision of Ch. X of the Code; and consequently upon the party interrogated failing to comply with such order, the Court has the power to pass an order under s. 136. LALLA DABEE PRESHAD v. SANTO PRESHAD

[I. L. R., 10 Calc., 505]

57. ———— Filing list of documents—Suit for land—Title-deeds—Affidavit.—In a suit for possession of land, the order that the party in possession do set forth a list of documents, is to be confined to documents other than title-deeds. Where the title-deeds are required by the plaintiff on special grounds, as, for instance, where it is alleged that the defendant is a trustee for the plaintiff, those special grounds on which they are required should be set forth by affidavit. HEERALOLL SABA v. JADUB CHUNDER CHENOKKEY . . . Cor., 66

58. ———— Discovery—Civil Procedure Code, 1892, ss. 131, 134, and 136.—If a notice under s. 131 of the Civil Procedure Code be not answered as provided by s. 132, the party seeking the inspection of documents may apply for an order under s. 133, and his application must be supported by an affidavit. The Court has no jurisdiction to pass an order under s. 136, unless the provisions of s. 134 are strictly complied with. DEAPI v. RAM PRESHAD . . . I. L. R., 14 Calc., 768

59. ———— Affidavit of documents—Sealing up immaterial parts—Sufficiency of affidavit.—A defendant in his affidavit of documents objected to allowing inspection of such portions of certain account books as did not contain entries relating to the matters in question in the suit, and claimed the right to seal up such portions, but did not state what portions of the books or which particular entries did not relate to the matters in dispute. Upon the plaintiff asking for inspection, only certain entries were disclosed, but inspection of the rest was refused. Thereupon the defendant took out a summons to consider the sufficiency of the affidavit. It was objected that this was not the proper mode of procedure, and that the plaintiff should have, under s. 209,

Belchambers' Rules and Orders, applied for production and inspection. Held that in matters of this kind the application should be made in proper form by applying for production and inspection. Ordered that the defendant do give inspection of his books of account to the plaintiff with liberty to the defendant to seal up such parts as, by an affidavit to be made by him, do not relate to the matters in question in this suit. HORENDHO NATH MUKERJEE v. GRINDRA KUMAR DUTT . . . 3 C. W. N., 495

60. ———— Affidavit of documents—Sealing up immaterial parts—Sufficiency of affidavit.—A plaintiff in his affidavit of documents objected to allowing inspection of such portions of certain account books as he stated did not contain entries relating to the matters in question in the suit, and claimed the right to seal up such portions. Upon that affidavit being filed, the defendant took out a summons to consider the sufficiency thereof. It was objected that this was not the proper mode of procedure, and that the defendant should take steps when inspection was refused. Held that, though technically the better way of raising the question would have been to take out a summons for production, the course taken by the defendant might, if preferred, be adopted, and that he was entitled to an order that the plaintiff should make a better and further affidavit showing what parts of the documents he claimed to seal up, and the grounds upon which the claim was based. *JADUB LOLL SHAW v. 61. ———— Insufficient affidavit of documents, Meaning of—Application for further affidavit of documents—Civil Procedure Code, 1892, ss. 129, 130, 134, 135.—When the affidavit of documents is not insufficient in its terms and does not fail to comply with the requirements of the Code, and a further affidavit of documents is demanded by a party alleging that his opponent has documents in his possession which he has failed to disclose in his affidavit of documents, the proper course for him is to apply on affidavit stating what documents ought to have been disclosed and that such documents are relevant to the issues. The proper time for making such application is at the hearing of the suit, and not before. AYARENDRA NATH CHATTERJEE v. KALLY KISSEN TAGORE 2 C. W. N., 17

62. ———— Inspection by agent of a party.—When under an order giving liberty to a party to a suit, his attorneys and agents, to inspect and peruse the documents produced by the opposite party, inspection by an agent is contemplated, the order should be read in such a way as would give the Court some control over the persons to be appointed to inspect the documents. Such an order contemplates that the agent will be a person standing in the position of the party for the purposes of the suit. Held therefore that the Court ought not to permit a person formerly in the service of the defendant to inspect as the plaintiff's agent the defendant's books which had been in his charge. KRAMUL HUQ v. KRAMUL HUQ

63. ———— Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 59, 140—Madras High Court Rules, Nos. 39, 43, 44, and 47.—A defendant is entitled, under the High Court Rules, to be furnished with a copy of documents sued on, which are deposited with the plaintiff. MAHOMED ABDUL AZIZ v. SUBBA NAIDU. I. L. R., 21 Mad., 490

64. ———— Interrogatories—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 121—Ex-parte order for interrogatories.—S 121 of the Code of Civil Procedure contemplates (1) leave to interrogate, and (2) the service of the interrogatories through the Court. It is the duty of the Court under that section to determine whether the applicant should be allowed to interrogate the other side, but not to determine at that stage what questions the party interrogated should be compelled to answer. Where an ex-parte order is made in chambers giving leave to interrogate, the party ordered to answer has a right to come into Court to have the order set aside if the case is one in which interrogatories should not have been allowed. When an order for the administration of interrogatories is properly made, a party objecting to the interrogatories administered may, at his peril, omit to answer the interrogatories to which he objects; but the more prudent course is to file his affidavit in answer, stating in it his objections to answer such questions as he objects to. Where interrogatories are scandalous, or in any way an abuse of the process of the Court, the Court may interfere at any stage. The powers given to the Court by s. 136 should not be exercised except in extreme cases. SHAM KISHORE MUNDLA v. SHOSHIBHOOSUN BISWAS [I. L. R., 5 Cal., 707; 5 C. L. R., 509]
